Bloated prices

Comment of the day
THE annual report of Mr Michael Turner, Chairman of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, will be read in Hongkong with more than the usual interest this year for his remarks on "speculative fever" come at the end of one of the most amazing weeks the share market has ever seen. Few will argue with his view that this super-spread is unhealthy. It is also dangerous. It is a vast inflationary bubble with insufficient genuine economic activity to support it and if it were suddenly to be pricked, as it could so easily be in this unpredictable age, we dread to think of the consequences.

Mr Turner's statement that the Bank is continuing to adopt a conservative policy towards new advances is tangible evidence of the Bank's concern though it seems that the effect of such a policy is negligible. Perhaps if more were followed the example there would be a reduction of speculative pressure, but there would have been far greater satisfaction if the recent budget had proposed deterrent measures.

EQUALLY alarming is the increase in prices of factory sites which, as Mr Turner said, is tending to reduce the advantage of cheapness of our products on world markets. Unfortunately the land price boom is the direct result of the auction system which Government is taking such pains to defend. Admittedly the Colony's coffers benefit but Hongkong as an industrial community can hardly be said to be tending to discourage these industries we need most to achieve a greater degree of diversification.

Surely the one way to discourage over-development of existing industries is by selling factory sites selectively. Surely the one way to encourage new industries to come here to broaden the base of our industrial output is to sell land at a price which will make their investment worthwhile. The idea of subsidising private enterprise is not to enable it to make bigger profits—though this may well result—but to ensure that we have a diversified industry that is not going to be threatened by unemployment and serious contractions the moment our biggest customers come along and demand restrictions on our main lines of production and export. The plea for an end to the present system of auctions has never been more valid than it is today.

Rhodesia policy protest

London, March 10. Lord Salisbury, the man who persuaded the Queen to make Mr Harold Macmillan her Prime Minister, dissociated himself from the Conservative Party tonight because he opposes its policies in Africa.

Lord Salisbury made public a letter to the Hertford constituency Conservative Association declining to run for re-election as its President. Said the 67-year-old peer: "I do not think it would be right for me to accept office in an organisation which exists to support the Government while I am in strong disagreement with its policy on a major issue."

DANGER
Lord Salisbury broke with Mr Macmillan's Government earlier in the week because he objected to a proposed constitutional revision giving black Africans a stronger voice in the government of Northern Rhodesia.

In his letter to the Hertford Party group, Lord Salisbury said he thinks the Government has embarked "on a course fraught with danger both for our fellow countrymen and the many thousands of loyal Africans in the territories for which we are responsible in those parts of the world."

THE FRENCH FIND OUT

Paris, March 10. The newspaper Paris Presse said yesterday that the spectators at an exhibition cricket match between two English eleven here had at last understood what separates England and France. It is not the channel—it is cricket. It commented "If by long practice one ends up by understanding the ceremonial of English tea, the need for an English Sunday, the indispensable measure which consists of closing English pubs during certain hours; if one even manages to excuse the fact that the English drive on the left there is one thing that can never be understood—that is cricket."

GAITSKELL WARNS HE'S DANGEROUS

London, Mar. 10. Mr Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the Labour Party, in a speech tonight, branded as "profoundly dangerous" recent attacks made by the Marquess of Salisbury on Mr Iain Macleod, the Colonial Secretary.

(In the House of Lords this week, Lord Salisbury described Mr Macleod as "too clever by half" for his handling of the Northern Rhodesia constitution problem.)

Mr Gaitskell told the Cambridge University Labour Club "this vicious onslaught by the Tory right wing on Mr Macleod's policies could be profoundly dangerous. It is a bad thing for our country that the party in power should be divided on such a critical issue."

Cast doubt
"For this cannot but cast doubt on the strength of the Government's position in their negotiations with both the Europeans and Africans in Rhodesia."

"Even more unfortunate however," added Mr Gaitskell, "is the danger that Lord Salisbury and his friends may encourage the more stubborn European elements to resist even more strongly the development of racial and political equality in Rhodesia."

"What he says may give the impression that here in Britain there is support for the maintenance of white supremacy. This is quite false."

"The British people recognise that a white minority in Rhodesia is entitled to safeguards but they believe that a true partnership between the races is only possible on the basis of genuine equality," concluded Mr Gaitskell.

Meanwhile in Colchester, Mr R. A. Butler, the Home Secretary, speaking at a Conservative Party rally urged "patience and goodwill" in dealing with the problems of emergent African countries.

Mr Butler said that the interests of the African and the white man often seemed to conflict and added, "for the white man often sees in the advance of the African a threat to his own way and standards of life. The African fears that the pressure of the European may act as a brake on his progress."

"It is not a problem," concluded Mr Butler, "that can be solved by force or violent action. Patience, compromise and goodwill are the ingredients of our policy in Africa. Above all, we must preserve a fair balance between the races."—Reuter.

Laos peace bid welcomed

London, Mar. 10. A Foreign Office spokesman tonight "warmly welcomed" the Phnom Penh communiqué which he said he was hopeful would bring a settlement to the Laos crisis much nearer.

In Washington the State Department said today it welcomed the agreement between the Laos leaders "to seek neutrally, peace and national concord for Laos."—Reuter.

CONGO TAKES A TURN FOR THE BETTER

Leopoldville, Mar. 10. The political climate took a sudden turn for the better in the Congo today, with the United Nations command easing a state of alert in Leopoldville and the Congolese Government indicating it is willing to compromise on returning two captured UN supply ports.

The twin developments came as Rajeshwar Dayal of India, Secretary General Dag Hammarskjöld's personal representative in the Congo, left for UN headquarters in New York.

Under a previous state of alert, UN civilian personnel were not allowed to circulate in Leopoldville, except on essential trips, and were forbidden to go outside the city. Under the new, relaxed alert, they can circulate freely during the day and are only "advised" not to go outside the city at night.

Cabled
A Congolese government spokesman said details of the plan to permit UN troops back into the two supply ports of Banana and Makadi have been cabled to President Joseph Kasavubu at the Congolese summit meeting in Tananarive, Malagasy.

"If the president is agreeable we can reach a compromise on the return of the United Nations to the bases," the spokesman said.

Before leaving Leopoldville, Dayal said talks for return of the bases were "moving forward."—UPI.

SOVIET SPACE DOGS SURVIVED METEORITES

Moscow, Mar. 10. The spaceship, put into orbit and landed at a command from the ground yesterday, travelled through increased meteorite activity, but its outer casing was tough enough to protect it from meteorite hazards.

A scientist, Vsevolod Fedynsky, disclosed this today according to the news agency Tass. "The safe return of two Soviet spaceships from the upper atmosphere shows that, though meteoric dust particles striking the earth are numerous, the actual likelihood of a major meteoric particle hitting a spaceship is negligible."

"All the micro-meteoroids do is dent the outside shell of spaceships," he added, according to Tass.

The four-and-a-half ton spaceship carried a dog named Blacky and other animals. The satellite was exposed also to intense ionisation produced by solar and cosmic radiations, which did not affect it or the dog.

"Blacky feels fine after her return to earth," he was quoted as saying. Two leading scientists predicted today that a Russian would be the first space traveler.

MRS ROOSEVELT SLAPS DOWN CHIANG'S CHINA CLAIM

Mrs. Roosevelt

New York, Mar. 10. Although mainland China is at present not qualified to join the UN, the Nationalist Chinese delegation can only represent the people of Formosa, Mrs Eleanor Roosevelt said last night.

President Roosevelt's widow, who is a US delegate at the present General Assembly session, told University of Massachusetts students at a lecture last night that she foresaw a change in policy concerning Peking and Taipei at the next session of the assembly. She said: "The fiction of Formosa representing the Chinese people will not be acceptable at the next session." She said she favoured the Nationalist delegation being taken as representing only the people of Formosa.

As for China, joining the UN, Mrs Roosevelt said that this country could not at present qualify in view of its warlike statements and its action in Tibet.—AP.

Soliciting

London, Mar. 10. Advertisements in shop windows giving "vital statistics" of prostitutes and their telephone numbers constitutes an offence under the street offences act, London sessions appeals committee decided today.

To put such an advertisement in a window is soliciting under the act, the committee decided.—Reuter.

'Explorers' say it was all a joke

London, March 10. The men who put Warbah Island on the map, took it off today.

Sir Thomas Hickinbotham, the former Governor of Aden, and Edward B. Wakefield, a Member of Parliament, admitted it was their little joke on Britain's "Who's Who."

Since 1942 the book has listed under "Sir Thomas" name the note: "Collaborated with E. B. Wakefield, CBE, MP, in his circumnavigation of Warbah Island."

Under Wakefield's name, the entry read: "Joined Sir Thomas Hickinbotham, KCMP, in his circumnavigation of Warbah Island, 1942."

In 1942 Sir Thomas was Britain's political agent in the Persian Gulf state of Kuwait. Wakefield was also in government service there. They were bored.

"No one has ever sailed round Warbah Island. Let us be the first to do it," Sir Thomas said. Wakefield agreed—they would do what no white men had done before.

Sir Thomas recalls: "Nobody ever heard of Warbah Island. So we decided to put it on the map by sailing around it in a launch."

"It was no North Pole saga. In fact, Warbah Island is a mudflat, only just visible at high tide. It covers about three square miles."

"It was all rather a joke," Sir Thomas said.—UPI.

Mutiny soldier to die

Accra March 10. One Ghanaian soldier has been sentenced to death, two to life imprisonment and a fourth to ten years imprisonment by a Court Martial here in connection with the disturbances in the Congo in January. This was officially announced today.

The charges arise out of a mutiny in a section of one of Ghana's army battalions serving with the United Nations forces in the Congo.

The mutiny took place in January in the Ghana Army's third battalion, stationed at Tshikapa, in the Kasai province.

COLONEL WOUNDED
The battalion commander, Lieutenant-Colonel D. A. Hansen, was seriously wounded. The Ghana government brought the whole battalion back to Ghana and disbanded it. Some of the soldiers were dismissed from the service.

Shortly after the incident, the Ghana Government announced that about 100 members of the battalion took part in the disturbances.—Reuter.

UN will debate Angola issue

United Nations, March 10. The Security Council today agreed to debate the situation in Portugal's West African territory of Angola.

Seven of the Council's 11 members indicated they supported or would not oppose a Liberian request for inscription of the item on the Council's agenda. As this was sufficient for the inscription, it was adopted without a formal vote. The Soviet delegate had claimed a "crisis" in Angola could cause "an explosion" at any moment, and that peace in Africa, was threatened.—Reuter.

Critical article

Washington, Mar. 10. The chief of the clearance review branch of the U.S. Navy Information Division has been replaced because of an article criticising the U.S. Navy, it was learned today.

The article which appeared in the specialised review "Data" stated that the American destroyer fleet was inadequate for hunting nuclear submarines.—AP.

Big Russian contracts for UK firm

London, March 10. Two contracts worth more than £2 million for the design, supply and commissioning of two major chemical plants in the Soviet Union, have been received by a British company, it was announced today.

The contracts were signed at the Leipzig spring fair, East Germany, today by Mr. O. Denton, vice-president of Technosimport—the Soviet body controlling imports of technical machinery—and Mr. F. P. Korn, director of Wycon Services Limited.

The contracts have been awarded on a cash payment basis. One plant is for the production of Dimethylol Ethyleneurea which is used in the manufacture of drip-dry fabric and the plant, which includes high degrees of automation, can produce 12,000 tons annually. The other contract is for a plant to produce 4,200 tons annually of a hormone weedkiller—Reuter.

New stamp

Melbourne, Mar. 10. A new eleven penny Australian stamp, blue in colour, depicting a rabbit bandicoot, would be issued on May 3, the Postmaster-General, Mr. Charles Davidson, announced today. He said the present fauna series would be completed by the issue, later in the year, of a halfpenny Australian stamp depicting a Tasmanian tiger—China Mail Special.

Princess Amina?

By BOB COUSENS

The age of instantaneous travel is here. Last night I was sitting in what was very obviously a Kowloon night club one minute, and the next I found myself in Cairo.

Regrettably, the journey lasted only fifteen minutes, but while it lasted I saw one of the best belly-dancers east of Suez. What made the whole thing more fascinating was that this particular belly-dancer will one day be a peeress of the realm.

She is Princess Amina, wife of the Honourable Tony Moynihan, heir to Lord Moynihan of Leeds and cousin of Queen Elizabeth.

I know Tony in Australia some five years ago, at which time he was single and managed to scandalise even that scandal-immune country with riotous pyjama parties in his rented seaside house.

"I've grown out of that stage now, though," Tony hastened to assure me when he had caught his breath after a vigorous performance on the bongos drums and I had cooled down after watching Princess Amina's performance.

"Anyway it's a stage that everyone goes through. I don't know why there should have been such a fuss. Just because I'm the son of a bleedin' peer or something."

The "bleedin' peer" is the present Lord Moynihan, who has not spoken to his son since his marriage to Amina.

"Not because she is a belly-dancer or anything like that, you understand," Tony said.

"It's just because she has— to put it politely — dark skin pigmentation. My father felt it was letting the side down and all that sort of thing for a future peer to marry a girl of a different race."

"My mother understands, but she and my father were divorced when I was a boy."

Fortunately, Tony said, his father couldn't disinherit him.

"My grandfather was the first Lord Moynihan," he explained. "He came from the gutter and was very proud of it—ridiculously proud of it."

SURGEON

"He was one of the greatest surgeons that ever lived. Many surgical instruments used today were invented by him, and he pioneered many operations."

"He was left-wing and all that sort of thing and didn't want to accept a peerage when it was offered to him."

"But the medical profession made him do it, because he was the first doctor ever to be honoured like that."

"Anyway he was determined that there would never be a poverty-stricken peer in his family, and he put his personal fortune into a trust fund, to be held by the holder of the title."

A DAUGHTER

"My father can only get the interest—about £100,000 a year or something, just pocket money. He can't touch the capital."

"So whatever my father says or does or feels he can't stop that coming to me."

Tony and Amina have a daughter. They had hoped that it would be a son, who would have been the first peer ever with "dark skin pigmentation."

Amina is half Egyptian and half Malayan, and lays claim to being a Malayan Princess. She was born in India, and is a citizen of Pakistan.

"The way people carry on you would think I was the only aristocrat in show business," Tony said.

SO WHY?

"It's not true. Lord Foley plays the piano in New York night clubs. He's known as The Piano-Playing Peer."

"Then there is Carlton Earl of Wharfedale—he's my first cousin and a close cousin to the Queen than I am. He runs his own rock 'n' roll band."

"And he just does it for kicks. He's a millionaire in his own right—owns a quarter of Scotland or something."

"Another one is Lord Shane Riden, eldest son and heir of Field Marshal Earl Alexander of Tunis. He plays the piano on the Irish Radio."

"Commoners who are good enough in show business are made knights or peers anyway, and do they stop work because of that?"

"So why all the fuss about me and Princess Amina?" Tony asked.

I have a suspicion that the fuss doesn't really bother him. For one thing his is the highest paid act scene to appear in Hongkong (a rumoured US$400 a week) and he has a contract to appear in America later in the year for US$1,600 a week.

It seems to be well worth it to the night clubs. Last night there was a scene rarely witnessed in the Colony, and Tony says it happens every night.

Ten minutes before Princess Amina was due to appear, the audience left their tables and picked up a few seven deep around the dance floor to get a better view of the act. And what an exotic, erotic, frenzied act it was.

And if the performer happens to be a future peeress? Well, as Tony says: "It's a good gimmick, isn't it?"

End of a gay night life for Jackie the cockatoo

Sydney, March 10.

The gay night life of Jacky—a white cockatoo from the Sydney suburb of Canterbury—has ended.

He has been placed under a permanent curfew.

The Chief Judge in the New South Wales Equity Court, Mr. Justice McLelland, today ordered that Jacky must henceforth remain indoors from 2000 AEST (1000 GMT) each night until 0700 (2100 GMT) the next morning.

Told of the judge's decision soon afterwards by a reporter, who went to interview him, Jacky curled up his sulphur-coloured crest and reportedly said "darn it, darn it."

However, Jacky's next door neighbours, Mr and Mrs Henry Gilmore, were a happy couple.

COMPLAINED

They had complained to the court that Jacky was keeping them awake at nights with his screeching and chattering.

But today, Jacky was quieter after being told of the court-ordered curfew.

He was pecking away at food in his wire cage when the bad news was put to him.

Then, poking his head out, he repeated: "Darn it...darn it."

He made no further comment, but merely drew back inside, hung his head down...and slowly walked up and down, on his round wooden perch.—China Mail Special.

Film invaders repulsed

Plymouth, March 10.

Kingsbridge Rural Council stood firm on its beaches to reject plans for a massive landing by Darryl S. Zanuck Productions Incorporated.

Zanuck, a big American film producing concern had applied for permission to "invade" south Devon's longest beach this summer landing 500 men from invasion craft as part of a film about the Normandy D-Day landing during World War Two.

Kingsbridge council however wrote to Zanuck's Paris office rejecting the application.

The council explained that it had spent much effort clearing the sand of litter.—China Mail Special.

REDIFFUSION

AN INVITATION TO AIR YOUR PET GROUSE

Rediffusion listeners are invited to air their pet grouse in life over the Blue Network on Wednesday at 7.15 p.m.

If you feel there is room for improvement in the traffic problem, parking problem, the budget, school homework, the water situation, public transportation or any topic of general public interest, drop a line to "You Said It" c/o Rediffusion (H.K.) Limited, giving your telephone number and John Shepard will be ringing you up on the week that your pet grouse will be broadcast.

Malcolm Lockyer and his orchestra will take over the 9.00 pm spot on Sunday evenings to present music in "Lighter Mood."

As the title suggests the music is more light-hearted than sentimental. The tunes are catchy, the rhythms jaunty, and there isn't even a moderately serious thought to interrupt the happy-go-lucky course of the music. Malcolm Lockyer is a pianist as well as a band-leader, and is a popular radio and T.V. personality in Britain.

Rediffusion is presenting two special shows this week. The first, "Let's Laugh At Life," features some of the world's top comedians and will be broadcast tomorrow evening at 7.45 pm. The second, entitled "Concert In The Sky" and narrated by Ken Nordine, recalls the performances of great musicians of the past and has been scheduled for Friday at 9.35 pm.

Rediffusion's programme of family requests, "Thirty-To-One," will feature the musical choice of the Wong family of 53 Wongsichong-road, 1st floor, tonight at 7.45 pm.

On Monday at 8.30 pm the Yick family of 16 Kimberley-road, 2nd floor, Kowloon, will be invited to select their favourite tunes.

NEW ADVENTURE SERIES AND 'CAGE OF GOLD'

Tony Randall, Thomas Mitchell and Kim Hunter star in "The Secret Of Freedom," tonight at 8. The story, written by three-time Pulitzer Prize winner Archibald MacLeish tells of an idealistic, civic-minded couple whose faith in America's future is temporarily shaken by what they view as the undue complacency and materialistic preoccupation of their fellow townspeople.

Joe, a factory supervisor (played by Tony Randall) and his wife Jill, (played by Kim Hunter) have worked long and hard on behalf of a tax referendum to boost teacher's salaries and improve the local schools. When the measure is defeated at the polls, Joe and Jill become deeply disturbed and disillusioned. Jill, in fact, becomes so upset that her husband is eventually forced to storm out of the house in search of the answers to his wife's embittered and piercing questions.

Later, on the same evening, a new hour, action-packed adventure series, Bonanza, comes into the 9.45 spot. Bonanza, recaptures the age when men scratched and clawed at the earth's crust by day, caroused drunkenly at night and stalked each other like animals.

The age has passed but the saga of their courage and chicanery, frustrations and triumphant discoveries are recaptured in this exciting series.

Play Of The Week, "The Guv'nor" Sunday at 9.45 is a dramatic comedy of carefully planned robberies on the latest business lines.

A call to 999 sends a police car racing through dawn-deserted London hot on the trail of a stolen car. However, the car proves elusive and while the chase leads the police all round the city a jeweller's shop is broken into. The call has been a hoax — and back at Headquarters they realise... "The Guv'nor" has struck again.

An excellent cast, which never misses a trick in this amusing crime story, is led by Michael Hordern, Coral Browne and Jimmy Hanley.

Tuesday sees the last of the four part documentary series on the Federation Of The West Indies, and tonight's part is entitled "The Responsibilities of Freedom."

In "Have Gun Will Travel" at 10.05 Richard Boone again stars as Paladin in a story called "The Great Mojave Chase."

Jean Simmons and David Farrar star in "Cage of Gold," the Friday feature film set against a background of Paris and a luxurious night club.

PROGRAMME IN HONOUR OF ST PATRICK'S DAY

Irish listeners are wished 'Caeb mile sailte'—and non-Irish 'A thousand welcomes'—at 9.30 on Friday evening when Col. R. E. Kenny presents a programme in honour of St Patrick's Day.

Ireland — a country rich in folk-lore and tradition — has given the world a wealth of poetry, prose and music and a cross section of these can be heard including some of the writings of James Joyce.

As a good Irishman Col. Kenny is not insensitive to 'The Little People,' and during his sojourn in Malaya he came across happenings which seemed to have no logical explanation except witchcraft. On Tuesday night at 10 o'clock we are repeating the first of his four talks on this fascinating subject, entitled 'The Reformed Demon Grandmother'.

In place of the usual Composer of the Day programme on Friday (2-3) we have a concert of music inspired by — or written in — Ireland called St Patrick's Day Concert.

A Sunday morning feature since the station went on the air has been music for the Sabbath (10-11) which has been devoted mainly to music by Contemporary Composers. This series concludes this week with a programme of music from Czechoslovakia.

The development of Czech music can be followed through a short extract from Smetana's Triumphant Symphony composed in 1848 and played by the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Karel Sejna. This is followed by Charles Mackerras conducting the Pro Arte Orchestra in Janacek's Sinfonietta for Orchestra (1926), and contemporary Czech music is represented by the Suite from Jarmil Burghauer's Ballet The Servant of Two Masters, first performed in 1958. Zdenek Kosler conducts the Prague Symphony Orchestra.

Frank Muir and Dennis Norden were responsible for the scripts of Take It From Here for eleven years, during which time they built the show—which got off to a shaky start—into the top British radio programme. To commemorate this long association, the stars recorded what were considered to be the highlights of the various programmes by a board of independent members.

Jimmy Edwards, Dick Bentley and June Whitfield can be heard in The Cream of Take It From Here on Tuesday evening at 8.30.

Thursday

11.00 LATE NIGHT FINAL.

cludes his Take Thirty series on Monday evening at 9.30, and represents the Calvin Jackson Quartet in the Battle of the Bands on Friday, at 6.30. Nick Demuth opposes him with the music of Lambert, Hendricks and Ross.

Tamara Karsavina is talking about Ballet at 10.15 on Wednesday night, and she is followed by performances of Ballet music with which she has been associated. Carmen Dragon conducts the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra in Weber's Invitation to the Dance, and Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra in Stravinsky's Firebird Suite.

David White plays requests, talks to guests and gives away prizes to members and families of H. M. Forces in Services Special (Sunday 5-6).

DR ZHIVAGO AND MUSIC FOR ST PATRICK'S DAY

No novel in this century has caused more widespread interest than Boris Pasternak's masterpiece "Doctor Zhivago," which along with his poems won the author the Nobel Prize for Literature three years ago.

Banned in the Soviet Union but hailed in the West as the greatest Russian novel of the twentieth century, its political repercussions have brought it millions of readers, but unfortunately distracted attention from its outstanding literary qualities.

It is the story of a doctor-poet who reaches maturity at the time of the Russian revolution and the troubled period which follows. But as many critics have pointed out, the political background is merely secondary; what the novel is really about is life as it is lived by human beings everywhere, and we can all recognise our own tribulations in the struggles of Yuri Zhivago, Lara the woman he loves, and a host of other characters.

William Glen - Doepel has made an adaptation of the novel in two parts for the BBC, and Radio Hongkong is broadcasting the first of these on Monday evening at 9.15 pm. The second part can be heard on Monday week. Paul Scofield plays Zhivago, and Rosalie Crutchley Lara.

MUSIC FOR SAINT PATRICK DAY:—At 6.15 on Friday evening there will be a special programme of Irish music for St Patrick's Day. For this, the BBC Northern Ireland Light Orchestra, which listeners will remember for its "Irish Rhythms" programmes, will be joined by two solo artists who enjoy great popularity in Ireland and farther afield, Henry Hinds (bass) and Shiela Larchet (harp).

FOLK SONG RECITAL: Wednesday, 8.15 pm—Bill Crofut is a young American folk-singer who has come to Hongkong in the course of a world tour undertaken with the aid of a State Department Cultural Research Grant. In the different places he visits he collects local folk songs and introduces audiences to their American counterparts. He will be singing a programme of American folk-songs on Wednesday evening. Unlike most folk-singers, he accompanies himself not on the guitar, but on the banjo.

"ELIJAH" ON FM: Friday, 8.30 pm (FM only) — This week "At the Opera" becomes for once "At the Oratorio." FM listeners on Friday evening can hear one of the best loved of all oratorios — Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The recording is "Elijah" by British artists — Jacqueline Delman (soprano), Norma Procter (contralto), George Maran (tenor), and Bruce Boyce (baritone), with the London Philharmonic Choir and Orchestra, conducted by Josef Krips.

SERVICES BOXING: Friday, 9.45 pm (AM only) — One of Radio Hongkong's medium-wave programmes on Friday evening will be a visit to the Macpherson Stadium, Kowloon, to hear boxing commentaries recorded earlier in the evening on the finals of the Land Forces Team Championships, between the 5th Field Regiment, Royal Artillery, and the 1st Battalion, Royal Northumberland Fusiliers. Commentaries will be by Brian Saddler and Inter-round summaries by Michael Bulmer.

Picture shows the young American folk-singer Bill Crofut, who can be heard in a programme of American songs on Wednesday at 8.15 pm.

MERRICK WINN

Honda endowed with a fantastic skill and burdened by an enormous trust...

THE nurses went to Mary at 3.20 in the afternoon. They went with scissors and cut from the front of her head all of her long, dark hair.

Poor mad Mary didn't mind. She had been too ill too long for vanity.

She hardly noticed when the nurses lifted her on to a wheeled stretcher and took her along corridors busy with visitors who looked at her, wondering; then into a lift and up to the anaesthetic room.

She hardly winced when the anaesthetist, masked and capped and gowned, pushed a hypodermic needle into a vein in her arm, and injected a quick-acting anaesthetic to spare her the sights and sounds of the operating theatre.

He said: "Just count one, two..."

And her brown eyes, with nothing left but beauty, closed on the count of three.

Mary's clinical notes, in the buff cover, went with her into the theatre; following her as they had followed her everywhere, from doctor to doctor and hospital to hospital, for six years.

Among the last entries was: "Deteriorating rapidly. Sits quite motionless. Stares into space. Face blank."

Only a brain operation—the most controversial in modern surgery—offered any hope of recovering Mary, the real woman lost somewhere behind a nightmare called schizophrenia. This is the story of that operation, told with the full permission of Mary, her husband, and the surgeon.

This was the Mary who went to sleep on this dark afternoon in dying October. This was the "chronic schizophrenic, outlook very poor."

What kind of woman would wake up? She might be better; there was a slight risk she might be worse. There was only one certainty: she would be different.

The anaesthetist started the general anaesthetic. The surgeon went to Mary and covered her face and her head with white lint soaked in mind antiseptic.

He cut a flap six inches square in the lint. And the sharp white light from the overhead lamp shone down on the "operation area."

It was 4 pm. The preliminaries were over. The surgeon was beginning the most controversial operation in modern surgery. The brain operation leucotomy.

It has one of the worst records of any operation.

Disastrous

The original form of leucotomy was carried out on more than 20,000 mentally sick people in Britain after the war and up to the early 1950's.

More often than not the results were useless. Or disastrous. Patients suffered permanent deterioration in intelligence and personality. Some became "vegetables." Some committed violent crimes. Some are now in Broadmoor.

This operation has since been drastically modified and neurosurgeons claim that its several versions are more accurate and carry little risk of serious after-effects.

We would see. With Mary. The surgeon studied Mary's X-ray pictures—her "brain maps"—hung on the theatre wall.

He went back to Mary. He took a scalpel and delicately drew a thin red line above her hairline.

The surgeon told me: "I make the incision high up so the scar won't show when her hair fully grows again—in about three months' time."

Here was faith, and hope. He assumed that in three months, or before, Mary would care about her hair and, like any other woman, be sanely vain.

Perhaps.

Then, with a trephine, he cut through a disc of bone one-and-a-half inches across. It took 10 minutes.

He put the disc in warm salt water. He studied the X-ray pictures again. And began work on the brain itself.

We know as much about the brain, in a sense, as we know about the moon. We know a great deal—and very little. Both yield their secrets slowly.

Secrets

It is possible, as it happens, that we shall learn the great secrets of each at about the same time. In five to 10 years.

This will be apt. Lunar and lunacy—the two have always been linked in superstition.

They should be exposed, and revealed, together.

The brain's outer layer, the cortex, has, like the moon, been "mapped" in an approximate way and it is known that the front part—the frontal lobes—are concerned with intellect and emotions.

The basic idea in all forms of leucotomy is to separate certain areas of the frontal lobes so that the disordered emotions of mental lines—like excessive tension, anxiety, fear, rage—can be quietened.

This is what the surgeon was doing now to Mary.

A nurse, 18, who had seen this operation only once before, whispered to me: "I don't like this part. It's so final."

I knew what she meant. The surgeon was separating parts of the brain which could never again be joined.

Downstairs, Mary's husband wandered around, worrying.

MARY

There was nothing to worry about; there was practically no risk to Mary's life. But he worried.

I had said I would tell him how things were going. There wasn't much to tell. But it helped him to talk.

He said: "It's funny—I used to live as a kid near the mental hospital Mary went into. We used to joke about it and call it the loony bin."

"It just shows, I'm ashamed of it now."

Kicked

He kicked a stone. I kicked it on further. He said: "I'd no idea they were going to operate until the day before yesterday."

"I got a wire asking me to come to see the surgeon. I tell you, it shook me."

It was his turn to kick the stone. Instead he stopped and asked: "Tell me, you saw dozens of people with a much better chance than Mary. Why did you choose her?"

I couldn't say. I didn't know. But it sometimes happens. You see somebody and, suddenly, they are important. You never know why.

It was true I had picked a had case in Mary. I knew it. "Outlook very poor." Perhaps this was it.

Her haunting hopelessness. Her eyes. They had looked so dead, but if you looked right into them you could feel the pleading.

Back in the theatre the surgeon was making his final cut.

Sewed

He said to me: "That's about it." He put back the disc of bone and sewed in 18 stitches of black silk thread.

I saw Mary the same evening. She was pale, a little bruised about the eyes. She was confused, as the surgeon said she would be.

I asked her how she felt and she said "All right." I asked her if she remembered being ill and she said, bewildered: "When was I ill?" There seemed no change at all. The surgeon told me: "Come and see her in a fortnight—we'll know better then." But you can't wait a fortnight when you get involved in people's lives. I went back in eight days.

So I asked, "Do you remember whir?" I told you yesterday?" For a moment she was bewildered again. Then she said: "You called me beautiful." She smiled. It was the same schizophrenic smile. Empty,

The Other Side of the Coin

Two women who care about people reveal just what this means to them in another instalment of a fascinating series

SHE is a quiet woman. The sort of person who has somehow carefully earned herself the respectful title of Miss.

Her name is Grace Bennett, and she is a missionary. She returned to London early this year, after five years' work in Korea, and went to live in her little room at Pilgrim Lodge, the home, in Surrey, for the men and women who work for the British Mission to Lepers.

Shy

It was there I met her, a desperately shy, happily nervous woman, with the anonymously-featured, smooth-skinned face of a nun; sitting with her hands in her lap.

She wore a green cardigan, a blouse with an embroidered collar, and a grey pleated skirt, and on her feet there were tiny, bright, flat-heeled slippers.

Her room was plain, neat and bright, with a tidy regiment of carved Oriental figures on the mantelpiece, small vases of anemones, a mound of sixpences for the gas, some pale blue knitting, the evening paper open at the crossword puzzle—and silence except for the gentle hiss of the gas fire.

She is shy without aggression, enjoying the company, but incapable of self-projection. She would much rather listen than talk.

Vague

Still, she remembered a "strict upbringing" and a vague ambition to be a nursery governess. From school she went into the Civil Service, then she became a nurse, had a room in a nurses' home, and a social life which consisted entirely of cups of coffee in other nurses' rooms.

Beliefs

So she went to Korea, and

Although she had never before left England, or even communicated with anyone outside her immediate circle, she was not in the least afraid to go to Korea and make contact with people of a different race, and to impress her beliefs and thoughts on them.

On the other hand, she said she would be frightened of being the guest of honour, indeed a guest at all, at a dinner party in London.

She explained the difference. "My mission work, is a vocation, therefore I have the strength and courage to go to Korea. But there would be no reason for me to be at a dinner party. No good would come of it."

She said: "I would be completely out of my element. I would be rather afraid of the people."

That she did, in fact, make contact with the Koreans has been the biggest surprise of Miss Bennett's quiet life.

She comprehends intuitively the psychology involved in building up the confidence of strangers whom she might be able to help.

"My earliest job was to find Koreans who could act as sort of middlemen for me. Naturally, the natives would be suspicious of a foreigner who claims to have come to help them."

"But I believe I convinced them that was all I wanted to do."

Talks

Now that she has returned to London, she is lost and bewildered.

She said: "I can't get used to being back. I have a feeling of not being here. I miss having something definite to do each day, and I don't seem to fit in anywhere."

She longs to get back to Korea, but without sentiment. For she is a practical woman

MISSIONARY

Grace Bennett

who sees no romance in doing God's work; or, if she see it, would never attempt to describe it.

She gives talks in church halls with lantern slides and photographs to pass round. When she speaks about the problems of the lepers in Korea she becomes animated, sure of herself.

Otherwise she is detached, and content to be so.

Miss Bennett does not form dislikes of things or people. Rather she likes one thing which necessarily excludes something else — she likes country life and gardening and "does not care very much" for city life.

"There are too many people and too much noise in the town," she said. "There doesn't seem to be any real meaning to a city, just a lot of movement and hurry."

She told me a story which I believe she treasured most of all her Korean experiences.

One morning she had travelled to a country district far from Taigu, where the Mission to Lepers had its headquarters.

A peasant woman who thought Miss Bennett was rather pale, asked her if the sun never shone in Taigu.

"You see," Miss Bennett explained, "she didn't think of me as a foreigner, but only as someone with a rather pale skin who was therefore a little different."

"It is odd, isn't it, how simple things so much better than the clever ones?"

"I have a sort of antennae, you know. It tells me about people at once."

"Actually it always upsets me dreadfully to find someone doesn't like me. It always seems to me to be so unfair of them. I always, always, make an effort to be pleasant and I have never given anyone any cause to dislike me."

Looking down at her white hands Lady Lewisham noticed the time on her diamond watch. It surprised her.

I feel the time always surprises Lady Lewisham. It always seems to be pointing to the next entry in her diary.

The next Appointment to take up the Individual Problems of some Absolutely Riveting People.

IT is not difficult to meet Lady Lewisham. She is always prepared to organise a moment in her diary—precise life for the gracious acceptance of some attention or other.

When I telephoned her she said at once she would be delighted to see me, and called for her "little book," the current contents of which she proceeded to recite in a voice as exaggeratedly alive as a television-commercial actor's.

"Not tomorrow," she said, "Tomorrow first thing I'll be at the hairdresser's."

"Then there's a cocktail party at the Italian Embassy. After that I'll be at a party meeting at County Hall and in the evening we're having a tiny dinner party and on to a theatre."

"Let's try Wednesday."

Party

"There's a council meeting in the morning. I can't miss that because someone's going to talk about Piccadilly Circus. Oh, and there I have a lunch date, and in the afternoon there's a committee meeting at Westminster City Hall and then we're off to Mum's."

"Now, I've absolutely promised to take the children to a cowboy film, and there's a tiny coffee party in the morning, and in the evening we're having a dinner party because there's a wonderful little man coming from the Victoria and Albert Museum to tell us about one of our tables which has turned out to be something quite grand..."

And so on. I think there were eight days. Eventually a bolt hole was made and I was crammed into it.

In the meantime Lady Lewisham promised to send me some papers—"they'll tell you all about my Boy Scouts and things," she said gaily.

Lady Lewisham's publicity hand-out explained that she had helped raise money for buses to take the lonely and infirm for outings; that she is patron of a group of Boy Scouts, who have officially changed their troop name to "Viscountess Lewisham's Own"; that she has personally taken up 500 individual problems as a Westminster City Councillor; that, of all things, she holds a gold medal for public speaking.

Riveting

When I eventually replaced another visitor in Lady Lewisham's sitting-room, she seemed to be excitedly anticipating a game of something or other and asked what I wanted to ask her about.

I said I wanted to talk about her and people.

"My dear," said Lady Lewisham, her voice making capital letters, "but how Absolutely Riveting. But People are the most important things in the world. One simply has to adore them, or what else is Life all about?"

"It's absolutely Frighteningly True," she said. "And if you don't believe me just look at History."

"It's People that have made it. It was all those Little Human Things that Changed the World. Think of Napoleon. If he hadn't caught a cold, his army might have marched right into Moscow or something Frightful like that."

"And then think of that darling man Disraeli. You know what a positive State the European monarchy was in when he came along, now don't you? I mean, Queen Victoria absolutely Had to be Empress of India or Where Would England have Been?"

"And there was dear Disraeli with his little bunches of violets for the Queen, just Egging her on to great things."

There was a brief pause, when I nearly managed to ask Lady Lewisham a question. But before I could catch my breath she had caught hers and she carried on:

"We Need Personalities. If we didn't have them our Society would just Collapse. We still need the Right Sort of People."

Unfair

"I," she said, throwing a bright smile at a small butler who had crept in with Dover sole. "I simply see people as Individuals. I like to humanise things, cut through red tape, make stuffy officials see the Ordinary People and Respect Them. It gives me enormous satisfaction to be in position to speak up for people."

"I adore to have lots of people around me who are Attractive and Charming and Successful," she said. "After all, they are the only people to have around one."

SPECIAL PRESENTATION BY JILL BUTTERFIELD AND FASHION ARTIST Robb

ANOTHER FIRST IN THE PAPER THAT MAKES FASHION MAKE SENSE

Paris — at everybody's price...
BANG ON THE EASY-TO-WEAR WAVELENGTH

FOR the first time ever, in the very first week they can be shown to the world, I give you the pick of the Paris collections.

And this season Paris couture has had its headiest success in years.

The simple reason is that the designers have at last adopted a please-the-people policy. They have banged right in on the easy-to-wear wavelength.

NO GIMMICKS

INSTEAD of producing fashion-plate clothes that look pretty only in pictures, the couturiers are designing fashion at its best on the move.

INSTEAD of relying on glitter and gimmicks to grab the headlines, they make women look gorgeous again.

INSTEAD of creating merely for girls whose cash and curves are in the right place, they have our more mundane problems in mind too.

What does all this mean to you? Simply that if you have an ounce of fashion sense, a peppering of practicality, the main fashion moves you make this spring are bound to be influenced by the clothes you see here today.

LOOK first of all for SWING. Dior showed skirts that swung in a slightly stiffened flare; Ricci, skirts that jived in a flutter of flat box-pleats; Cardin, skirts that eased their way over the hips.

LOOK secondly for COLOUR. The couturiers see this spring through rose-coloured spectacles—using every possible shade of pink. Look for bright French navy blue. Look for mimosa yellow.

LOOK for SIMPLICITY. The prettiest dresses are sleeveless, with simple collarless necklines. The smartest suits are neat as school uniform.

LOOK hard, very hard, for ACCESSORIES — the new squared-toe shoe, the new satchel handbag, the new gold chains and glitter pins. Even the best dress, like the best cooking, needs an individual finishing touch.

PARIS COAT LINE:

Dior's version has rounded shoulders, a casual shirt neck and his typical horizontal channel seaming above and below the waist. Coat copied by Wallis.

PARIS SUIT LINE:

Cardin's version has a simple neckline cropped at the collarbone and his individual side fastening jacket. The skirt, narrower than most of Paris, is still easy. Copied by Windsmoor.

PARIS DRESS LINE:

Dior's version was wittily called "Blue Jeans" although it's anything but everyday. He made it in pure silk, imitated the saddle stitching with glittering bugle beads. Copied by San-Clair.

PARIS DRESS LINE:

Nina Ricci's version is sleeveless with a simple neckline, an unfitted bodice, and a skirt that's caught into soft folds at the side. Copied by San-Clair in pure silk.

PARIS COAT LINE:

Balmain's version has easy dropped shoulders, wide low-set sleeves and an upstanding Mandarin collar. Note his doll-sized pill-box worn over one eye. Coat copied by Peter Robinson.

PARIS SUIT LINE:

Dior's version shows his gently flaring skirt at its easy-to-wear best. The jacket is curvy, with high little pockets and neat lapels. Copied in yellow, beige, or grey lino-wood by Peter Robinson.

PARIS DRESS LINE:

Michel Gomo's formal version is a silky sheath with a gently dropped waist, a draped side-tying bodice and a slightly flaring hemline. Copied by Susan Small in pink Tricot.

PARIS SUIT LINE:

Chanel's version is in bright navy blue with a gored skirt saddle stitched in white; it's sparkled with brass buttons, brightened with white cuffs. Copied by Wallis.

PARIS DRESS LINE:

Dior's version for the very young. The bodice is bloused with soft horizontal tucks, the skirt is one of the wildest in Paris. Polly Peck's interpretation.

PRACTICAL HOMECRAFT

You sleep for 30 years—so do it in comfort!

If you reckon on a regular eight hours' sleep at night, you will spend a third of your life-time in bed. That works out at something between 20 and 30 years. So obviously it is important to choose a bed that is really comfortable.

But don't be misled into thinking that this is the only thing that matters.

The bed must be made, the room tidied, and the floor cleaned. Sweeping under a double bed that is only about 4in clear of the floor, for instance, can be a back-breaking and infuriating task.

But points like this can easily be overlooked by a customer. So here is a brief guide to what to look for when choosing a bed.

For easy cleaning, the underside should be 10in off the floor. For easy making, the top of the mattress should be at least 2ft high—any higher and it will be difficult to climb into. For easy sleeping, a single bed should be as wide as the distance between your outstretched elbows, which means that for most people a 2ft 6in bed is too narrow. It should be at least 8in longer than you are, which means that the standard length of 6ft 3in is only suitable if you are not more than 5ft 7in tall.

It seems strange that longer beds can normally be obtained only as "specials," since 41 per cent of the men in Britain are 5ft 8in tall or over. How have these figures

CLEANING SPACE: GOOD

MATTRESS: GOOD

...AND BAD

MATTRESS: GOOD

been obtained? They are, in fact, an example of the way science is contributing more and more to the design of furniture and equipment for the home.

It is a science which is concerned with the study of people so that equipment can be designed to suit human beings instead of making human beings adapt themselves to suit the equipment.

To find the best dimensions for beds, hundreds of photographs were taken of people sleeping, showing how they turn and stretch and curl up and spread themselves out—an essential part of relaxed sleep.

Hundreds of photographs were taken of people making beds and cleaning underneath them.

And hundreds of people have been measured to show what percentage of people there are of varying heights.

From all this it has been possible to arrive at a few simple measurements so that all you need when you go to choose a bed is a tape measure and a note of the ideal dimensions.

What of the mattress? Little scientific information exists on whether certain types of mattress are better than others.

But doctors recommend a bed base and mattress which have a soft surface with gradually increasing firmness below so that your anatomical bumps and curves can be nicely cushioned while allowing you to lie completely flat.

A mattress that sags in the middle should definitely be avoided.

LADY LUCK

your CHINA MAIL horoscope

SATURDAY, MARCH 11

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 19): Approach your partner by slow degrees when suggesting a proposed drastic change, and let the idea develop gradually in his mind.

PISCES (February 20-March 20): When arguing over minor details of a plan, don't overlook the fact that you are in full agreement with the main issues.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Strength of character will be needed to resist a powerful temptation over the weekend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A social gathering which you will attend under duress could turn out to be surprisingly enjoyable.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21): A person born under Taurus will not be very responsible to your idea of what constitutes a pleasant weekend.

CANCER (June 22-July 21): Gratitude towards a benefactor can be expressed in many ways, and you ought to choose the one which will be least embarrassing to him.

LEO (July 22-August 21): Make a distinction between voicing an opinion of a friend's action and actually criticising it adversely.

VIRGO (August 22-September 22): Don't let your natural suspicions be allayed by a glib person who is definitely trying to make use of you.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22): Your interest in a person of the opposite sex is quickening, and you will soon be ready to assess the importance of the relationship to you.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): Your love of comfort and the good things of life will be a spur to you to accumulate the wherewithal to indulge in them.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21): Don't expect a great deal of sympathy from someone to whom you have not shown much consideration in the past.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20): Your excellent judgment protects you and these close to you from rushing headlong into any impulsive ventures.

LUCKY ENCOUNTER: If this is your birthday, a meeting with a man named WALTER may have some special significance.

JACOBY on BRIDGE

Overcall of Two Cues One-Suiter

HOW do you play the jump to two hearts or two spades over an adverse opening bid? Forcing? Strong? Weak? Very weak?

Thirty years ago I invented the idea of using it as a weak bid. Twenty years ago Roth-Stone made the weak jump overcall a part of their system and 10 years ago Kaplan-Shelwood used it in theirs. Just in the last year or so Goren adopted it also and just about that time I decided that since my child had so many distinguished foster parents I could abandon it.

In Jacoby-Smith the single jump overcall in a major suit shows a strong hand with a good suit. This isn't new except that we place certain definite restrictions. To be exact, the hand must be a one suiter although it may also be long in the opponents' bid suit. It shows from 10-15 high card points and from six-plus to eight-plus playing tricks.

It is not a forcing bid and if partner wants to force us to bid again he has to cue bid the opponent's suit. If he just bids a suit of his own we will pass.

North's jump to four spades was a pre-emptive raise. He did not know if South could make game, but he felt that the opponents might get back into the bidding if he didn't crowd things some.

As you can see, four spades can't be beaten. Neither can an East-West four heart contract.

Q—The bidding has been:
North East South West
1♥ Pass 1♠ Pass
3♥ Pass ?

Q—What do you do?
A—Bid four spades. You have a perfectly sound one spade response and should go on to game.

TODAY'S QUESTION
Instead of bidding three spades your partner jumped to two no-trump. What do you do in this case?

BEAUTIFUL MOTHERS AMAZE ME

London.
LOOKING back at some of the mothers I've met has given me new thoughts on problems of the parental bond, and if you notice I've changed my opinions on one or two points—chalk it up the process of living and learning.

Good mothers is a subject that always get me into hot water. I was not altogether surprised to receive scores of letters criticising my choice of Lady Aberconway as a good mother. Being rich, titled and nannied, you thought, automatically disqualified her.

Two years ago, when my sun rose and set on piles of nappies, I might have agreed with you. I have to admit that leisure seldom seems to improve women, but since starting this series I have met "good mothers" in all sorts of circumstances including Mrs John Broby, a Bohemian housekeeper but excellent mother.

Generosity of spirit, compassion, and a lively mind are the qualities that count with me.

The worst mothers I see to-day are the over-ambitious ones. I have to say that children's achievements, present and future.

There is a terrible danger of parents valuing their children for what they do—not what they are.

Beautiful mothers seem to have more influence over their children than ordinary ones.

It is no coincidence, surely, that once-beautiful Mums provide the trickiest in-law problem. Not being cursed with this fatal beauty myself, I am often amazed at the way small children (two upwards) respond to looks.

Again, I'm sure it's no coincidence that the prettiest mother I know is also the biggest hit with my children. Maddening at times, of course.

Two young beauties, Mrs Michael Colvin and Mrs Robin Stormonth-Darling, both have calm, amenable children who respond to the slightest whisper of material reproach.

If you have slipped somewhat on the "prettying up" for your husband, it might be worth taking it up again for your children.

Dreary film-star mothers are people I usually avoid. (Actress Mums are different.) Nevertheless, one can't help wondering about the popularity of stars like Lana Turner (five husbands, one daughter recently in a remand home) and Elizabeth Taylor.

I am the last person to go around banning anyone's flimsy, it is the courting and flattering and feting that puzzles me.

Best here

FOR the expectant mother brightens all the time. When the new hospitals are pushed up and the old prejudices pushed away in Britain I think our maternity services will be the best in the world.

Mrs Jack Gelber, wife of the "beat" playwright, has come over to England from New York to have her second baby at University College.

She says she was miserable in her New York maternity ward with the first. Her husband was banished during labour and the whole thing cost about HK$1,600 for five days.

She told me about the new cult in America which holds that the ante-natal period is the most important in a child's life.

The thing she likes best about it, she told me jokingly, is that by the time you've had the baby there's nothing further you can do except feed it.

Agreed, but

A NOTHER tricky subject is career mothers. I wrote that I found it strange that any mother would deliberately forgo those first delightful months with a new baby for an office desk.

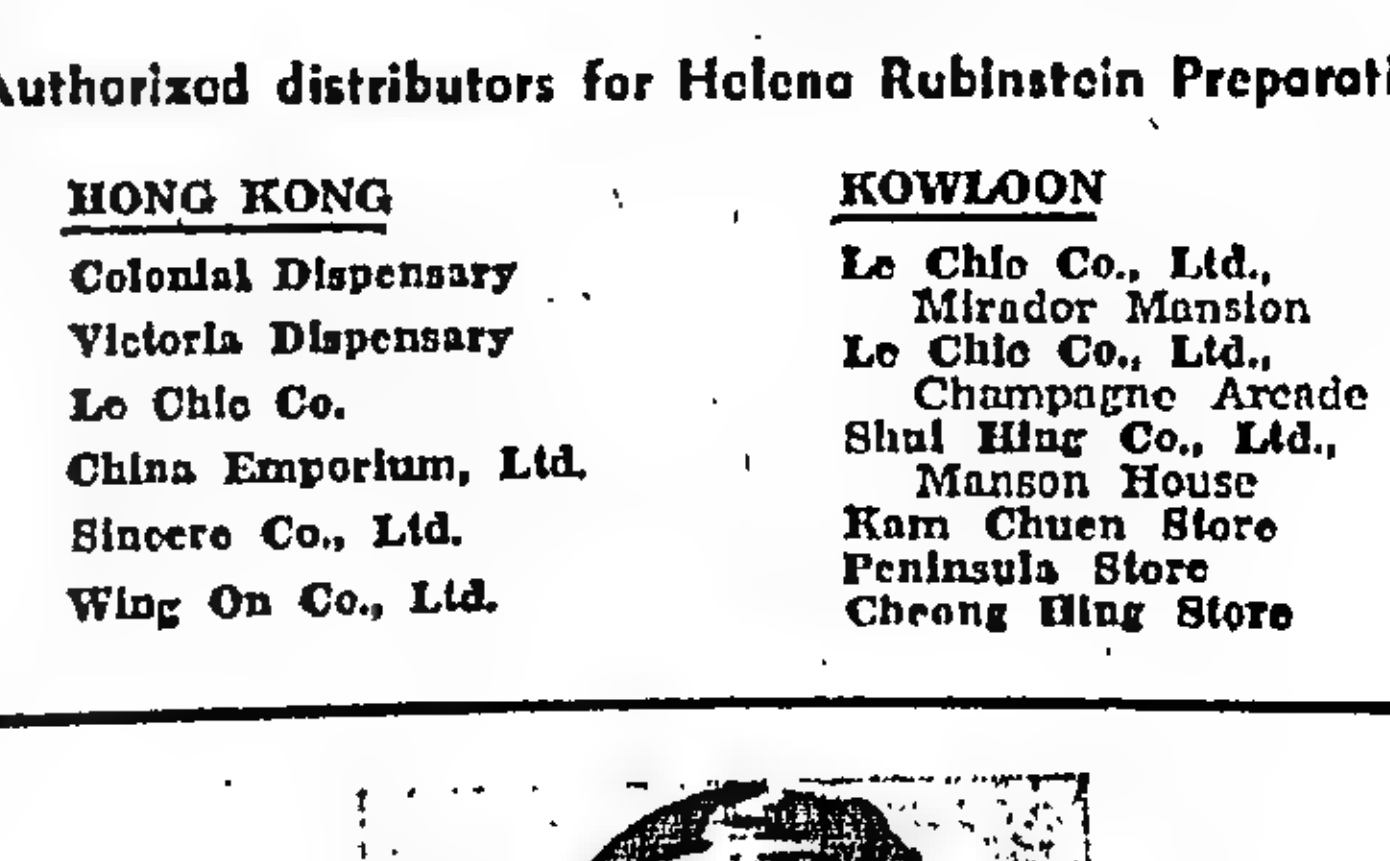

Everyone who wrote agreed with me, and some denounced "cuckoo" mothers. But on this point I parted with my readers.

Now, I am fairly sure that certain mothers are happier and better behind an office desk. Glands, or genes or something. The good career mother often has a particular knack of sharing her busy life with her chil-

THE SIMPLE FACTS ABOUT AIR CRASH SURVIVAL

THE question airline operators have been optimistically dodging for years came bang out into the open again last month.

Investigators reporting on the crash of a turbo-jet Electra into Boston harbour which killed 62, recommended firmly that all passenger seats in planes should face backwards.

What happens to a passenger strapped to a forward-facing seat in a crashing airliner? Experts at the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine at Farnborough say:—

The legs snap into the fully extended position, the body jack-knifes round the seat belt, the head cracks uncontrollably forward against anything that is in the way.

The sledge

If the legs catch under the seat in front, they are probably broken. The head, if it escapes serious injury on the back of the seat in front, is often likely to be split open on the tray zipped into its container on the seat back.

By JOHN ELLISON

Serious internal injuries usually result from being thrown against the rigid belt. All these things happened to the 62 aboard the Electra.

All have been predicted for 16 years by the people at Farnborough.

In a long series of experiments to analyse the survival factor in air crashes, they have hurtled dummies and human guinea-pigs down a rocket sled ramp with violent deceleration at the end of it.

And they say that without question there is a far greater chance of crash survival if the passengers are in properly designed rear-facing seats. As a result of these findings, RAF Transport Command adopted rear-facing seats for all its big transport aircraft — and insist on them in civil aircraft chartered for troop flights.

Why, then, do passengers on most of the major international air companies still face forward?

The first answer given by the airline operators is that most of us are happier looking the way we're going, and, since accidents are very rare anyway, we may as well stay that way and enjoy ourselves.

They also argue that most air accidents happen "on the slow," with the plane swinging to right or left. In this case, they say, at speed, one can just as easily be thrown out of rearward facing seats — a claim which the RAF disputes.

At Munich

There are two crashes which seem to support the RAF theory.

Seventy-six people escaped without serious injury when a Hermes airliner crashed into a railway embankment at Southend. They were all in rear-facing seats.

In the Manchester United disaster at Munich two years ago, 12 passengers in rear-facing seats (fitted for convenience rather than safety in BEA airliners) were all saved and only two seriously injured.

Whereas of the 25 passengers in the forward-facing seats, 19 were killed.

Britain's Air Registration Board, watch-dog of air safety, three years ago put forward a plan to make rear-facing seats in airliners all over the world obligatory.

But when the proposal was rejected by other foreign airlines it was not thought reasonable to burden British operators with regulations which might hinder them in the competition for passengers.

Why is there so much opposition among the big operators to safer seating?

An aircraft-seat manufacturer said:— "Rear-facing seats are slightly heavier, because they incorporate a head rest and are 5in. higher, and slightly more bulky than forward-facing ones. They are also more expensive."

If they were fitted in a 100-seat airliner the payload would thus be quite noticeably reduced.

Get in touch

International adoption of rear-facing seats would confront the air firms with a hefty bill for new seats. They say this would not deter them if they thought new seats would really be safer. They should get in touch with the RAF Institute of Aviation Medicine, and the 76 survivors of the Hermes crash.

AFTER ALL IT WAS JUST A DUCK

THE shooting of a duck has caused a storm among bird watchers.

For four years two ornithologists studied the bird that returned every winter to a gravel pit at Sutton Courtenay, in Berkshire. They thought it might be the lesser scaup from America.

This year it did not return. Then the two men — Harwell scientists — read that the bird had been SHOT last year.

ONLY WAY

The marksman, Dr. Ian Nisbet, a Cambridge physicist, who obtained permission to shoot it from the Nature Conservancy. "It was the only way to identify it," he said.

One of the Harwell men, Dr. Charles Ford, said: "Shooting seems a throwback to the nineteenth century. Efforts might have been made to capture it alive. After all, bird watching is supposed to be fun."

Fun or not, the shooting established that the bird was just a hybrid duck. "Most people," said Dr. Nisbet, "had got rather bored watching it."

"The 'Beachcomber' was a dream of a place, but you just can't beat Hongkong..."

EDDIE COMES HOME

HAVE you ever had a Fog Cutter? ... or a Planter's Punch? ... or a Missionary's Downfall? Have you ever sat down in a restaurant where crocodiles swim lazily in blue lagoons? Have you ever eaten a Bali Ha'i or a Bongo Bongo?

You haven't? Then, according to tall mustachioed Eddie Brasil, you just haven't lived. Because Eddie is a restaurateur in the magnificent style, and he has just given up the management of one of the most—the Beachcomber in London's plush Mayfair Hotel.

Eddie managed the place for just a year after its opening. "And then I got out. When you're in something big like that, you always get out when it is at its peak—at least I do."

The Beachcomber is a fantastic restaurant, built at a cost of £145,000, and the haunt of practically every big name in London.

It is a huge replica of a tropical paradise, a place of bamboo and flowers, of rock pools and wrecked ships, of sunshine and sudden tropical rain storms, where macaws from South American rainforests live amidst a confusion of jungle greenery — and where the above-mentioned crocodiles, rare ones from the Nile — swim in their lagoons.

And the whole idea was Eddie's, Eddie of Hongkong, of Jimmy's Kitchen and the Parisian Grill, an old China hand. The Mayfair Hotel wanted a Polynesian Room and so they imported Eddie from Vancouver where he was managing a restaurant in the Waldorf Hotel.

Eddie is a fan of anything Polynesian, he loves the islands, the tropics and the food, so he undertook the Beachcomber, and was given carte blanche.

And in just 11 weeks, in league with interior designers and builders, he got what he wanted — "a dream of a place". He ordered 2,000 wooden dishes

Eddie (centre) with his chefs stand behind a colourful, exotic display of Polynesian food at the Beachcomber.

By SYLVIA DA COSTA-ROQUE
CHINA MAIL WRITER

Would he like to set them up? He would but he doesn't want to leave Hongkong for a long time yet, he has a job to do.

Eddie Brasil is the new manager of the Parisian Grill. "Emile Landau is going on a long holiday, he has decided that after all these years he deserves a rest," said Eddie.

He has only been back in the Colony for several weeks and is still only feeling the pulse of the Colony. But he would like to change the "PG." "But don't say anything yet, my plans aren't solid enough."

"People might think it queer that I left the Beachcomber for Hongkong, but I love the place. You just can't beat it, and I prefer it to anything Europe can offer, and I love the 'PG'." Eddie left Hongkong four years ago, after managing the "PG" and Jimmy's Kitchen on and off for a number of years. He wanted to open a restaurant in Bangkok but opened one in Vancouver instead.

Off-beat

Those queer sounding concoctions in the first paragraph? Those are some of the specialties of the Beachcomber, and Eddie made up the names.

Fog Cutters ("If you are driving don't have more than one," says the menu), Planter's Punch and Missionary's Downfall are particularly potent drinks. Bali Ha'i and Bongo Bongo are tropical salads.

Eddie Brasil loves the exotic, the colourful, the off-beat, but I don't think anyone needs to worry. I doubt if we'll be seeing crocodiles in the Parisian Grill.

"PEPE" PRIZE WINNERS

OUR "Pepe" competition proved popular with Club members, and of the many entries received, we had three people sending in all correct answers to the quiz.

Here then are the correct answers and the names of the six lucky winners of the contest.

Answers: 1. Sandra Dee, 2. Yes; 3. Gossip Columnist; 4. Dancing; 5. Piano; 6. Frank Sinatra.

Easy, wasn't it?

The winners:

Miss P. Dunk of Flat 7A, 135 Boundary-st.

Miss Patricia Cresswell, Flat 10 C, Marlborough House, 154 Tai Hang-road.

Miss Maureen Edwards, 12, Briar-avenue, 1st floor, Happy Valley.

All three ladies had all correct answers.

The following three gentlemen had one mistake each, but still got one of the double-passes to see "Pepe".

They are: Peter Tse, 34 Hankow-road, 3rd floor.

George Loh, 17 Leighton-road, 1st floor.

George Ho, 91 Third-street, third floor, Hong-kong.

Thank you all for writing in. To the winners—congratulations. To the losers—better luck next time. And watch this column for more competitions in the near future.

GREATLY encouraged by the success of her first major recording enterprise—the Kong Ling album—Music City's Francis da Silva has revealed her intention of recording more Far Eastern artists, "whenever the opportunity presents itself." Which, interpreted, means: if they are good enough to break into the tough Asian and Far Eastern markets.

Miss Mona Fong, possibly the most famous of Chinese "pop" singers, apparently fits the bill, for Miss Silva has just returned from Manila after personally supervising the recording of Mona's first stereophonic album.

But why go all the way to Manila for a recording date? The answer is simple. The producer wanted the best Latin American orchestra available to accompany the singer—but at a price that wouldn't leave anyone's bank balance in the red.

The 17-piece orchestra of Carding Cruz was hired and the job done in exactly two afternoon sessions.

Both Miss Silva and Miss Fong are enthusiastic over the finished product, and after hearing the tapes, I cannot help but share their enthusiasm.

Richer

Miss Fong has made many records before, but in my opinion she has never been heard to better advantage. Her voice sounds richer, her tone rounder and she handles lyrics and tunes—many of them really difficult—with unusual confidence.

Miss Fong sings in both English and Mandarin, and I expect this disc to have wide appeal.

Francis da Silva has put in a tremendous amount of work herself. She selected the majority of the songs—many of them you'll be hearing for the first time—and together with disc jockey-singer, Tony Myatt, wrote the lyrics to some of the tunes, like "Millionaire," "Bungawan Solo" and "Delilah."

Big surprise of the album to me, however, was the unusual arrangement of the Presley best-seller, "Wooden Heart," Hongkong band-leader Celso Carrillo, who handled all the arrangements, did a masterpiece of re-writing on this one.

Opinion

Some of the other tunes on the album are the Japanese song "Kirol Sakurambo" ("Yellow Cherries"), "Sailor," "Romantica," "Yie Lai Shan," "Laredo," "Look For A Star" and "Green Grow The Lilacs."

I asked Mona Fong her opinion of the album. She declined to comment, and said she'd rather let the public decide. One thing she did say: "I've never worked harder."

The Carding Cruz orchestra is just tremendous. The (outfit) is considered the best Latin-American band in the Philippines—this in a country where good bands and excellent musicians are commonplace.

But the reputation of the Carding Cruz orchestra has now spread overseas, and music critics now count it one of the best orchestras of its kind in the world.

I HAD the good fortune of meeting Senor Mario Moreno—Cantinflas—during his stay here. I found him to be a warm and charming man, soft-spoken and easy going.

At the cocktail party given in his honour by Columbia Pictures at the Ambassador Hotel restaurant, Cantinflas made it a point of meeting everyone of his guests, and posed happily with many of them for pictures which will surely become treasured possessions.

One young man was lucky enough to win a Rediffusion Movie Magazine quiz.

His prize? An invitation to meet the famous Mexican comedian at the cocktail party.

KATE O'REILLY

THIS is the third picture in our series showing how history is reconstructed for the screen. This is to show you how the Italians do it.

You must have seen quite a number of Italian films which starred Steve Reeves.

Some of them are no more than a joke as far as history is concerned, but on the other hand, they prove mighty attractive, not only in Hongkong, but all over the world.

That is because they entertain, and they entertain because they are in colour, they have plenty of action and a simple story with no complicated plot.

The picture shown is taken from "Warlord of Crete" and it tells the story of the legendary Greek hero, Theseus, the slayer of the monster Minotaur.

You probably read about this at school before you started to specialise in history.

This monster demanded human sacrifices from the citizens of pre-Christian Crete, and the legend is told again and again in ancient fragments of pottery and stone.

This film happens to be a very good one, so they say at any rate, and it will probably find its way here.

It is made in the Italian big screen process which they call TotalScope, and the colour is the Eastman process.

The stars shown in the picture are Bob Mathias and Rosanna Schiaffino.

The Hit Parade

THE visit of the Mexican and international film comedian Cantinflas marks the arrival in Hongkong of the film "Pepe" in which he is starred.

Billed as the highest-paid film star in the world he shrugs this off as due to the fact that being part owner of the film company that employs him he is able to set his own salary.

During the last visit here of Mike Todd before his untimely death in an air disaster, Mike said that though Cantinflas was unknown outside his native Mexico, his (Mike Todd's) picture "Around the World in Eighty Days" would establish him for all time. Mike was right.

ROYAL WHODUNIT

THE King's house blew up at two in the morning with an explosion that woke everyone in Edinburgh.

Sheets of flame licked from its windows, then masonry and woodwork was flying through the air and windows for miles around were being rattled by a great blast.

Men and women came rushing from their homes with coats and shawls hastily thrown over their shoulders.

They stopped in their tracks as they saw smoke curling from the ruins of the house, called Kirk-o'-field.

Then with a shock they cried: "The king. They have killed the king!"

It was 1567 and the king was not a king as we understand it. He was in fact Lord Darnley, husband of Mary Queen of Scots.

There was a clanking of armour and up hurried the royal guard under its commander, the Earl of Bothwell.

Then, with two torchbearers, Bothwell began a search. He found the body of Darnley under a nearby tree. Near him was the body of his page.

Was Queen Mary in the plot? asks Henry Lewis

the house in which the King's Highness had taken up his abode was blown up into the air, within the space of a minute, at a time when His Highness lay asleep in bed, and with such violence that nothing remained intact of the entire building, walls and all . . . but the whole structure was utterly destroyed and lies in ruins while the corpse of His Grace and of a servant were found at some little distance from the said house.

"In order to avenge this hideous and treacherous deed, the Queen's Majesty . . . who would rather lose all she has than allow such a crime to go unpunished, commands, in agreement with her nobles and Council, that no inquiry be neglected which may lead to the capture and rigorous punishment of the authors of so godless and unheard-of an act."

The notice went on to offer a reward for any information about the murderers.

There was not long to wait for an answer. When the town woke next morning there were new notices.

They named as "doers of the deed" the Earl of Bothwell, Sir Archibald Douglas and others. And ended: "And the Queen knew about it all."

Roared

Bothwell roared through Edinburgh with 50 horsemen, ripping the posters with his sword, and swearing that if he found the person responsible: "I'll wash my hands in his blood."

It was too late. A day or two more and pictures of Bothwell were being dropped in the streets. On them was written: "Here is the murderer of the king."

Now Bothwell was at this time the most powerful man in Scotland. He had a string of imposing ranks and titles. And he had the biggest army in Scotland behind him.

Mary Queen of Scots on her way to execution.

But in April he offered himself for trial. He helped arrange the hearing himself.

And he heard the charge against him read: "James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, Lord of Crichton and Hails, High Admiral of Scotland, commander of the fortresses of Dunbar, Blackness, the Inch and Borthwick, commander-in-chief of the forces in the southern and western provinces . . . you are accused of having taken part, in plan and action, in the horrible, treacherous and cruel murder and death of the late exalted, mighty and most noble prince, His Grace the King, the most beloved husband of our ruler, Her Majesty the Queen . . . that you have treacherously set fire to the said house and with the force of a great supply of gunpowder have caused the whole dwelling to be exploded in the air and so the late king has been treacherously murdered, slain and destroyed by you . . ."

No witnesses

It may have been because no witnesses were called. It may have been because Bothwell had 4,000 of his soldiers around the court. But the jury swiftly found him innocent of the charge.

Just to settle the business completely Bothwell then offered to meet any challengers in single combat. No one accepted.

A week later, while the Queen was on her way back from Stirling Castle where she had been seeing the son of her marriage to Darnley—the baby who was later to become James VI of Scotland, and James I of England—her party was surrounded by 400 troopers led by Bothwell himself.

"Come with me," he ordered her. One of her courtiers drew his sword. But it was soon struck from his hand.

"No bloodshed," begged the Queen. "I will come." And she allowed herself to be taken to Dunbar Castle. The people of Aberdeen prepared to go to her rescue, but to their surprise, she sent them a message saying she did not require rescuing.

And in May—just three months after Darnley's death—the Queen married Bothwell.

More trouble

This touched off trouble in Scotland. For to many people who believed Bothwell responsible for killing the king, this was clear proof that Mary had also been involved in the plot.

Was she? Historians today have little doubt that Bothwell killed Darnley. But they are divided on whether Mary was involved or not.

Certainly some nobles thought she was. They rose against the Queen and her new husband. Bothwell fled to Copenhagen where he sat down to write his memoirs.

Mary was thrown in prison to face an investigation of the Darnley murder. Letters were produced which seemed to show her guilt. She said they were forged. In the end nothing was proved. But she was made to abdicate in favour of her son.

Everyone knows how she escaped to England dressed as a country girl, was imprisoned for 19 years by Queen Elizabeth and finally beheaded, accused of conspiracy against the English Queen.

ESCAPE FROM WINTER

NATURE loses its heavenly glow
As withered leaves carpet the floor,
Colourful flowers lose their shades,
As they lower their weak little heads
To bid a soft and sweet good-bye,
As they mournfully bow and die.
Playful animals rush to their cages,
To escape the winter's rages.
Little birds start to fly
Far away into the sky.

What is there left for me
But a winter full of misery?
Dead leaves covering the floor,
Little birds chirping no more.
Not an animal to be found,
Not a bloom on the ground.
But the dull and cheerless snow
Hiding the shameful cemetery's floor.
This is winter, dreadful and empty,
Devoid of nature and its beauty.

Oh wait little birds, wait for me,
For I would like to fly with thee.
To fly away on thy wings,
Away from winter and all it brings.
Oh come and let me mount thee,
And remove me from this misery.
To you, dull winter, I say goodbye,
For through the skies I am to fly.
But then I will be back one day.
When you have peacefully faded away.

★ STAMP NEWS ★

PRE-ADHESIVE HANDSTRUCK STAMPS

WHEN the first Post Office was established in February 1841, the office at Macao was continued as a sort of honorary agency of the Hongkong Post Office but under no control; and mails were exchanged directly with the Indian Post Office.

The handstruck marking introduced in April, 1841 was applied only to the reverse of incoming covers and those received at Hongkong in transit.

There are only two specimens of this postal marking known to exist, one of 1841, on cover, in which the year type is as illustrated; and one of 1842 in which the last figure of the year is in manuscript.

This latter specimen fetched £190 in a recent London Postal history auction.

Though the dollar had been fixed as the standard of currency on April 17, 1842 there was no subsidiary coinage; cents existed only in book-keeping transactions, and consequently the practice of opening running accounts with the Post Office grew up.

A register was maintained of letters received and despatched, and postage accounts were kept "on the understanding that all claims will be settled regularly each month."

The first handstruck stamp indicating prepayment of postage was introduced some time during October, 1842; a red-ink impression was struck on the face of the covers, and the amount prepaid separately inscribed in red (in sterling).

This strike is another extremely rare item; only two specimens on paper (not on complete covers) are known to have survived.

FAN-CLUB FAKERS OF HONGKONG

WHAT is a fan-club? I tried looking it up in the dictionary. I found "fan," I found "club," but I couldn't find "fan-club." Anyhow, from what I know, a fan-club is an organisation of people who idolise a person who, in most cases, is a movie star or singer. (People belonging to these clubs are in most cases sane and have names like John Smith and Mary Brown).

However, fan-clubs in Hongkong are entirely different things altogether! Here we have fan-clubs for bikinis, circuses, pickles, rainbows, ugly boys, pretty girls, and so on.

I detest fan-clubs! In fact members of which are really I imagine most people do. I and truly teenagers (that don't belong to any fan-club, lovable lot), and not people in none of my friends do either, need of psychiatrists' help.

I like a fan-club that is PRO-ELVIS or PRO-PAT and is satisfied to stop at that and not go a step further to be pro-Elvis-anti-Pat or vice-versa. Just leave others to enjoy what they think is enjoyable and they'll leave you alone.

Silly thing

Another silly thing is a strictly Elvis fan-club requesting Paul Anka or Neil Sedaka songs. What's the use of the fan-club then? They might as well have a "Presley, Boone, Francis, Sedaka, Anka, Armstrong etc. fan-club"—or something.

I can still remember when I used to switch on the radio to hear songs from John to Jean, James to Jane. There actually was more music than talking, and messages (if there were any, at all) were brief.

But nowadays what do we hear? Non-existent people requesting tunes for their non-existent friends, accompanying each request with a lengthy and

Be yourself

Teenagers, why don't you just be yourselves? We won't love you any better even if your name was Jonathan Fitzgerald Horatio Feeblebottle III!!!

Don't get me wrong though. I have absolutely nothing against honest-to-goodness fan-clubs in honour of a movie star, not his songs or his movies, the romantic message to a long list of people.

Switch on the radio on Saturday, and we hear.... "Now we have a request going out from Darling Centipede to Maroon Fairy, and from Elvis Wong of the loyal Pat Boone fan-club to Someone. It says here 'Please listen to the words carefully' (phooey!)"

"Going out from Sedaka Chan to darling Linda Loo; Here's a pocketful of rainbows going out to all the members of the really originally, truly loyal, Elvis Fan-club from the Head-hunters' Club . . . blah . . . blah!!"

And so on.

I'm fed up—and I'll bet my bottom dollar that the deejays want to put an end to this as much as everyone else.

Post-cards

So why don't they limit requests to postcards? This will save their time, give them something pleasant to look at, give us more songs and, besides, they would have a wonderful lot of postcards to show the folks when they go on leave.

So how about it? Let's do away with all these bikinis, romantica backyards, ugly girls, handsome boys, darling amoebas and rainbows and just settle for the few—the very few—genuine fan-clubs.

MEMBERS—DO YOU SHAVE?

How to get rid of that growth

MOST of the Club's masculine members—and some unfortunate feminine members who don't make their living in circuses—will agree that shaving is a frightful bore.

Day after day (and sometimes twice a day if we go to a compulsory party) we look at the same old face in the mirror and lather it round exactly the same area in the same precise way. If we are addicted to electric shaving, we mow down the stubble over the same acreage.

Well, to relieve all this trouble, here are some permutations and combinations that can make this nasty old business of shaving a real adventure and delight.

UNUSUAL

An unusual but interesting variation which perhaps does not immediately present itself to most members' minds is to fix the razor to the electric light switch and move the face over the razor instead of the razor over the face.

Another is to shave whilst sipping one's morning coffee through a straw, or with the pre-breakfast banana protruding from one's lips. If one sports a moustache this can be tricky operation and care must be exercised otherwise the banana may be served.

Something really hirsute friends may be plagued with that awful problem of unusually luxuriant growth in the nose or ears making them look like dragons. I would advise that rather than approach the problem in a defeatist manner, these friends should think of methods of removal which would give them back their self respect without making them prick their girl friends every time they sniffed the perfume behind their ears.

Abnormal nose or ears hairs are best removed by three methods: 1) Singeing with a candle or a blow-lamp; 2) uprooting with a pair of pliers or pincers; 3) Gripping the offending hairs in a smartly closed door and briskly walking away from it.

If you are one of those unfortunate chaps with a really blue chin, it is far better not to shave at all. Just let the jungle flourish and grow. It's no use fighting the impossible.

Cherry Tree Thieves

—Simon Proves He's Not Really Simple—

KNARF, the Shadow Boy with the Turned-About Name, and his friends Teddy, the Stuffed Bear, and Hiawatha, the Small-Sized Wooden Indian—the Three Musketeers, everybody called them—sang as they walked along Book Boulevard which runs behind the bookcase. Now Book Boulevard isn't a very wide road and it isn't everyone who can make himself small enough to walk along it.

But the Three Musketeers had no trouble at all.

Sometimes they walked three abreast and sometimes they walked Indian style, one behind the other. But no matter how they walked, they all kept singing.

And at the end of Book Boulevard, they came to a crossroad reading, "Mother Goose Road," and that's the one they took.

Suddenly, they saw a boy with yellow hair sitting on a wooden fence under a cherry tree.

"It's Simon!" cried Knarf. "It's Simple Simon!" cried Teddy.

"What does Simple mean?" Hiawatha asked.

"Simple means Foolish," said Knarf. "Foolish Simon," said Hiawatha. "Why is he foolish?"

"You'll see," said Teddy, the Stuffed Bear.

With that, they all ran up to Simple Simon and asked him why he was sitting on the wooden fence under the cherry tree.

To pick cherries

"Well," said Simon, as he held out a little empty basket, "my mother sent me here to pick some cherries from the cherry tree."

"Why haven't you picked them?" said Knarf, looking at the empty basket.

"Because they haven't finished eating yet," said Simon, pointing up at the tree.

Looking up, the Three Musketeers noticed there were half a dozen fat Robins on a branch of the cherry tree. And even as Knarf, Teddy and Hiawatha looked at them, the Robins were picking the ripest and juiciest of the cherries and swallowing them down. They didn't seem to mind the Three Musketeers at all, nor Simple Simon, either. They chirped good-naturedly.

"Get away from there!" Knarf shouted.

"No, no, don't say that. You'll get them angry," Simple Simon said to Knarf.

Teddy picked up a stick and wanted to shake it at the Robins. Hiawatha wanted to climb up and catch them but, Simple Simon wouldn't let them.

Always come back

"Go right on eating, my dears," Simon called up to the Robins. "Don't pay any attention to them. Please eat all the cherries you want. Just leave me enough to fill my basket!"

"But that's not the way to treat Robins who steal cherries," said Teddy.

"I don't think so either," said Knarf.

"Very foolish, Simon," Hiawatha muttered to himself.

"Oh no," said Simon. "All of you are wrong to think of chasing the Robins away. They'll Simon sat on a wooden fence under a cherry tree.

come right back again. No matter how often you chase them away, they'll come right back. So you might just as well let them eat all the cherries they want. They will anyhow."

"But they won't leave enough cherries to fill your basket," said Knarf.

As it turned out, Simple Simon was right. The Robins ate many cherries and ate them so fast that pretty soon they were stuffed full. Away they flew!

There were plenty of cherries left to fill Simon's basket. That made him happy and the Robins were happy as well.

"Not so very Foolish Simon," Hiawatha, the Small-Sized Wooden Indian said, as the Three Musketeers walked home. "Very Smart Simon, I think."

Rupert and the Winter Sale—30

As he approaches the bus-stop through the driving snow Rupert sees the big shape of the bus already there and among the people trudging away from it is his own Mummy, looking very tired and dispirited. "Oh, Rupert! You're here, you're safe!" she gasps.

"Oh my, I must get indoors and sit down. Oh, my poor feet!" Rupert helps her to the cottage and into an armchair. When he has put the kettle on for tea, Mr. Bear is sympathetic but there is also a mischievous little look in his eye.

Stewart Granger says: I know now —it was my pride that was hurt

Jean Simmons with her new husband, Richard Brooks

Is Faulkner the Picasso of words?

IS nobody happy, legitimate, sober, and sane in the Deep South of America?

To judge solely from the works of Messrs. Tennessee Williams, Caldwell, O'Neill, Hellman, and the rest, everyone south of the Mason-Dixon Line is either depraved, dispossessed or drunk, if not all three.

Phonetic

And now along comes the senior Southern novelist of them all, William Faulkner, to take up the White Man's Bourbon again in THE MANSION (Chatto and Windus, 21s.).

Mr. Faulkner here writes mainly in a kind of phonetic Southern vernacular, so that a summary of his tale might go something like this: Well, one mawing Mink Snopes got in a quarrel with Jim Houston over this cow outen Jefferson, Yoknapatawpha County, and mighty aggravating it was, until Mink done shot Jim and got sent for life to the penitentiary at Parchment. His cousin, rich Flem Snopes, did nothing a-tall to help Mink—leastways Mink, he think Flem done let him down, so he plans when he gets out of Parchment he'll just buy a little old pistol and head back to Jefferson fer fer kill Flem. Meantime, Linda Snopes has gone to New York, and met a Communist sculptor named Den Kohl, and what with her so hot and him so Kohl, they done got married. But Ben gets killed in Spain, in that old Civil War most everybody seemed to get killed in, and she gets wounded and made stone deaf, which is a pity 'cos she's purty.

In trouble

Back in Jefferson, she's in trouble for liking Negroes and having a Communist Party card, but she gets lawyer to apply for a pardon for old Mink—only by this time, having served 38 years, Mink done got himself released and shot old Flem.

BOOKSHELF BRIEFS

● NATIONAL GALLERY. London. Sir Philip Hendy. Thames & Hudson, 28s. The National Gallery collection, as its director makes clear in his brief history, is founded on the generosity of private collectors. Most of the book is devoted to 101 colour plates with extensive notes, and there is an excellent pictorial index. Another bargain in the famous World of Art series.

● ALL ABOUT THE FRENCH REVIERA. Peter Churchill. Vista Books, 18s. A reasonably handy companion for a first visit to the South of France, though the author would have done better to devote more space to places and less to elementary advice on getting there and shopping tips.

● THERE SHALL BE WINGS. Leslie Roberts. Harrow, 21s. It was not until after the 1914-18 war that the Canadian Air Force came into being (in 1918 more than a quarter of the flying men in the RAF were Canadian.) This is the detailed history from those early days to the present NATO role of the RCAF.

Lawyer and Linda got him out of town, and Mink walks off into unknown. End of story.

Now I done read—sorry, I mean I read this novel at first with difficulty and irritation, but then with increasing absorption and admiration.

The point is not whether Faulkner's style is always effective, but that he writes with immense power and range. Not for nothing has he won a Nobel Prize for Literature.

"The Mansion" is the final book of a trilogy, whose underlying theme is the way the Snopes family infiltrates its way to control of Yoknapatawpha County, but it can be read for its own single sake.

And how Faulkner can write when not over-conscious of his mannerisms!

One worry

There is an extremely funny account of a political meeting at which Congressman Clarence Snopes is taken for a lamp-post by a bunch of hunting hounds. And the return of poor, simple Mink to the world he has not seen for 38 years is agonisingly touching and vivid.

Like Picasso, William Faulkner seems to choose to work outwards from a small focal point, so that from the central but minor drama of Mink's revenge on Flem we come to learn something about almost everything and everybody in Yoknapatawpha County.

In fact by the end I felt I knew all there was to know about the place, except how to pronounce its name.—London Express Service.

ROME. ACROSS the roof-tops and the leaf-garlanded terraces, the dome of St Peter's glinted in the noonday sun. In his apartment in the suburban Parioli district, Stewart Granger finished dressing, and gazed out over the sun-splashed city.

It was already past midday, but there was no hurry. He had a day off from filming; a day he planned to spend at leisure. A contemplative drink, a fast drive into town in his new Maserati, then a long lunch at Capriccio.

At 47, Granger—his iron-grey hair flecked with white—is picking up the threads of a bright new film career.

At first, stunned by the break-up of his 10-year marriage to Jean Simmons, he could do nothing. He had devoted all his time to the marriage, and to making a success of their big ranch in Arizona.

In doing so he had let his film career slide with the result that when 31-year-old Miss Simmons walked out to marry director Richard Brooks, Granger had nothing to fall back on; nothing to bolster his shattered pride.

I persuaded her

But now his career is on the upswing. He is starting in a big new epic The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah, which Robert Aldrich is directing, and there are three more pictures lined up. The film star who really looks like a film star has more work than he can handle.

"I suppose," he said, "I helped kill my own career."

"I accepted all sorts of rubbish just to pay the bills so that Jean could sit it out and wait for decent parts. She wasn't as easy to sell as people think, you know. She always wanted to do off-beat things—like How to Succeed in Business Without Really Doing It, which didn't take a penny."

"I was the one who persuaded her to do Spartacus, and from that she got Elmer Gantry—and its director Richard Brooks."

He made a rude noise as he said the name.

"I'm getting over the break-up now, of course. It was my pride that was hurt. I know it. Now, if Brooks walked in, I don't know what I'd do—but in his face, kick his teeth in, or just laugh."

"In a way, perhaps, he did me a favour. It's better it should have happened now than in ten years' time. But I'm sorry for Jean. One day her conscience will give her a bad time for all the lies she told me."

She grew up

"Funny, isn't it, I knew nothing about her affair with Richard Brooks until after our divorce. I even gave her a Mercedes 190 when we parted. At least she had the decency to give that back; I suppose her conscience troubled her."

"But I'll never understand her going off with Brooks. Never. With someone like Rock Hudson, perhaps—a nice quiet guy after a rugged, dominant me. But Brooks..." He shook his head.

"What happened, of course, is that Jean just grew up. I'd always been around, doing things for her ever since she was a little girl. She wanted a change. It was like someone growing up and wanting to leave home.

"Women really hate you doing things for them, you know. I did the cooking and the organising and chose the curtains everything. But only because Jean was so helpless. She'd sit there reading the comic sections of the newspapers, or looking at the pictures in magazines while I did all the work."

"I suppose I should have let her go ahead and ruin the food and choose yellow curtains with purple dots, but I just couldn't. Frankly I long to meet a woman who'll do it all for me. In fact, I think maybe I have met one—though I don't want to talk about it yet."

He looked out again over the roof-tops of old Rome, sipping his drink. He looked tanned, handsome, and fit—better than I have seen him for a long time.

"I like it here," he said. "I thought I might settle in Geneva, you know, but I couldn't stand all that Fascist-type interrogation the Swiss make you go through. How much do you earn? What do you plan to do? That sort of thing."

My roots

"When my marriage broke up I turned naturally back to London; to my roots. I was sick of Hollywood, where an intellectual is someone who knows what films were released in 1936. But London's weather depressed me, and, though I love the place, I knew I couldn't live there again. Now I find Rome grows on you. I'm happy here."

"And I've got a new interest collecting antique porcelain. I'm fascinated by it; in fact, I've spent £30,000 already. I've got to be interested in something, you see. It used to be the ranch, but after I'd proved I could run it, it was only a question of time before I got fed up with it."

"And, of course, I've always got my two children—Jamie and Lindsay. Though I miss my baby, Tracy, who's with Jean. Jamie's a wonderful boy. Taller than me, and very handsome. We may make an actor out of him—so that I can retire. Actually he looks very like me. If I dyed my hair black we'd pass as brothers."

"We've always got on well, Jamie and I. I used to be a pretty good boxer once, you know—and his mother, Elizabeth (March) told him this. She probably also said I'd be proud of him if he were a good boxer too.

GRANGER AT 47
—a star who LOOKS a star.

"Anyway, one year when he came over to California to visit Jean and me, he proudly showed me a pair of gloves he'd been given by Freddie Mills, and went on raving about boxing. Then suddenly he broke down and cried and admitted that he hated it; that he was only doing it to please me."

"I tell you, I wanted to cry too. It made us very close."

No chums...

We went downstairs, and Granger took the wheel of the low-slung, gun-grey Maserati, and drove me back to my hotel through the busy traffic.

"I don't have any real chums any more," he said. "My best friend drifted away just before my divorce from Jean. I discovered why later—he was best man at her wedding to Richard Brooks."

He smiled wryly. "You know what I say? Damn 'em all, except six—and they can be pall-bearers. If they stumble, damn them too." He dropped me off, and then, sweeping out into the Via Veneto, accelerated away with a muffled roar.

The questions that will face our grandsons...

IN January of this year Colin Baxter was born in Montreal. In February of this year Graham Stark was born in Scotland. Admittedly there is nothing remarkable in this double event except that both these babies are my grandchildren. You will be glad to know that, the grandparents, the parents and the male infants are all doing well.

My son has just been appointed political correspondent in Ottawa for the powerful Canadian weekly journal: "The Financial Post." My son-in-law is in the Navy and is apt to be anywhere by the time you read these words. Thus life goes on, world without end, Amen.

It has been said that every child becomes the battleground of its ancestors. There are the maternal and the paternal backgrounds influencing the trend of character derived perhaps from the immediate and the distant past. Admittedly there is also the influence of the immediate present followed by the years of childhood to adolescence and so to manhood and womanhood. No matter how strong the individual character, it cannot be denied that the element of heredity is always at work. My two grandsons can boast a long line of ancestors. In other words they go right back to Adam and to Eve.

In spite of the fact that women have the vote, and sit in Parliament, and achieve success in specialised activities, this is still a man's world.

London Letter

By SIR BEVERLEY BAXTER, MP

built by children at play. And what earthly use are these mighty hills that grow no grain or are habitable for the human race?

What is the answer to all this? I suggest that it is to be found in the uncharted skies. Man, with his infinite capacity for daring and scientific development will almost certainly land on the moon before my grandsons have become grandfathers or even fathers.

If this seems to strain the limits of human vision turn back to Christopher Columbus. His father was a cloth weaver or wool-comber who did well for himself and, like a good father, apprenticed his son to the same trade. But at 14 years of age the boy went to sea where he traded with other countries and did a bit of fighting on the side.

He was convinced that he could reach India by sailing westward, and thus brought ridicule upon his head. Nothing daunted he kept developing his genius and his sense of adventure. Despite the disbelief of his fellow officers and the threat of the crew he kept going until he reached the Bahamas and then went on to Cuba.

While addressing his fellow MPs at Westminster he said: "The snores of this Government resound throughout the country." So he was sent to the House of Lords where he could do no harm. Yet Brabazon had played a mighty part in conquering the kingdom of the skies.

Then are we to assume that there are no more firmaments to conquer? What are the stars that shine like jewels in the skies? They say that the moon merely draws its light from the sun and that, in turn, the stars respect the glory of the moon.

We are not given the power to look further ahead than a few decades at best, but does anyone doubt that in the course of time a man will land upon the moon? And if the moon can be reached why not the myriad stars?

My hopes

Will my two grandsons, Colin Baxter and Graham Stark, play some part in it? Graham's father, as a Naval Officer, studies the stars when at sea but I do not doubt that his thoughts are sometimes of the wonder, the mystery and the poetry of the celestial sphere. As for Colin Baxter I hope that he will grow up to be a great newspaper editor and live out his years as a contemporary historian, playing his part in the life and habits and thoughts of his generation.

Well we shall leave the cradle now and leave the grandsons to their parents. Soon I shall motor to the aerodrome where I shall board a winged monster that will waft us to East Berlin. So we leave the nursery and journey to the one great German capital that is now divided into a free Berlin and a Communist Berlin.

No doubt I shall write about it on my return. Until then au revoir.

Miracles

Thus he discovered the New World which in the course of years was to become the most powerful and prosperous nation in the world. His blazing genius could not be confined. He dreamed a dream and made it reality.

But the age of miracles was not at an end. The other day I ran into an old parliamentary friend, Viscount Brabazon, who, before going to the Lords, was a lively, argumentative member of the House of Commons. He might have become a senior Minister if it had not been that,

Therefore it is almost certain that our two grandsons will grow up in a world that will not demand the sacrifice of war from the young.

Destinies

It may be a strange way for humanity to achieve sanity but it is the goal that matters rather than the way it is reached.

Yet science will not rest merely because it has reached such power over the destinies of men. In fact science must face the fact that, owing to the ingenuity of the human mind, life is being prolonged, which means that the world is going to be over-crowded. The population of China alone is adding millions of human beings every year. In the circumstances it is no wonder that the ruler of China looks lustily towards the wastes of Siberia. And equally it is no wonder that Communist Russia looks with fear on the growing power of Communist China.

What is the answer to the problem, since we can no longer look for plagues to reduce the mass population of the world?

Can we make the desert bear fruit? Can we empty the oceans of water? Can we demolish the mountains and replace them with fruitful soil? These are the questions which will confront my grandsons and yours when they reach the age of discretion and indiscretion.

A couple of years ago I flew from Vancouver to Quebec—the best part of 3,000 miles. From the altitude of the skies the huge mountains looked like nothing more than tiny sand

Marriage and motherhood are the two great careers open to women. It was so a thousand years ago and will probably be the same a thousand years from now.

Admittedly there are the arts, especially in music and drama, where women rise to great heights but it is still true that the home is their natural kingdom—should we say "Queendom?"

The horrors

So now let us return to my two grandsons, of woman born, and try to see what lies ahead for them. This much is certain—then youngsters will not see the horrors of war as his grandfather saw them. In 1914 we, who enlisted, witnessed the very bankruptcy of the military art. The only thing the generals could think of was the slaughter in the trenches until Marshall Foch brought genius and common sense to the task.

But what about the 1939-1945 war? Admittedly our cities were bombed night after night, month after month, but the madmaniac Hitler concentrated chiefly on London to feed his jorid vanity. Of all the targets that were expendable London was at the top of the list. If Hitler had concentrated on Birmingham, Manchester and Liverpool, where the factories were in full production, he might well have beaten us to our knees.

Maniacs rulers go to war because they believe that they can win, but if there is ever an atomic war the only survivors will be the rats. Thus has malignant science made victory impossible.

The strange case of the farmyard orphan

A TURKEY which scientists are studying today looks as fit, as aggressive, and as masculine as any other. But it has one outstanding peculiarity—it never had a father.

Except in lowly organised creatures like frogs and fish such an event should not happen because of limitations set by the mechanism of heredity.

PASSED ON

The characteristics of any creature are passed on from one generation to the next in the form of minute objects called chromosomes.

To develop normally an embryo must inherit a full set of chromosomes from its mother and a set from its father. These turkeys get over the lack of a paternal set simply by doubling up the set derived from the mother.

Why this happens the scientists do not know. It just does.

Because of a peculiarity of the chromosome mechanism which determines the sex of the new organism, a turkey—or any other bird—developed from a fatherless egg must always be a male.

Of the 67 turkeys raised by Dr Olsen every one has been male.

But in the world of mammals, to which the human species belongs, the situation would be different because the chromosome mechanism which determines sex is the reverse of that occurring in birds.

If scientists could discover some similar way of inducing fatherless offspring in mammals the young would all automatically be females.

POSSIBILITY

And these females alone could, in theory, produce more females generation after generation.

It is a far cry from turkeys to humans, but with the undoubted production of a fatherless creature as highly organised as a bird, the scientists have posed the devastating possibility of an all-female human world in which men could be expendable.

Festival of Sport's 'New Method' was quite magnificent

By I. M. MacTAVISH

CONGRATULATIONS . . . HEARTY, HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS . . . to the staff and pupils of the New Method College for their magnificent contribution to the 1961 Festival of Sport.

The capacity crowd which packed the Caroline Hill Stadium last Sunday night was treated to as brilliant a programme of spectacular events as it has been our privilege to see in this community for a long, long time.

The mass presentation of drill and gymnastics was the polished end-product of long hours of patient instruction and willing practice. In many ways it was a great pity the event was not given much greater publicity in non-Chinese circles. The show was a parking credit to planners and participants alike and it was surely a matter for some regret that not more Europeans were present to see these Chinese students in action.

This was a show to be proud of. Packed as it was with colour, variety, precision and talent it was good enough to have filled the Stadium several nights over. . . and I can only say that if you hear news of a repeat performance make a special point of getting a ticket.

Fitting finale

It was the best thing of its kind we have had the pleasure of watching since the big military tattoo a few years ago: a spectacle of mass effort and clever control that was a delight to watch. Congratulations. . . indeed. . . congratulations.

This display by the New Method College made a fitting finale to a very entertaining outdoor Festival of Sport. The organisers must have been very pleased with the success of this year's event and, with the willingness to learn by experience which they have always shown, they have no doubt started on new ideas to make the 5th Annual Festival a still more colorful affair. It was a most interesting human study to wander round the huge Hongkong Stadium and watch the reactions of the hundreds of Chinese children—and their parents and guardians—who were so keen to see the very first time.

They were not slow to show their appreciation of what they liked. . . and by the same token the items that did not appeal to them got a chilly reception.

The youngsters were thrilled to bits by the prowess of the trio of skillful archers whose exploits brought well earned rounds of cheers and applause. I found myself wondering, as I sat among the entranced children, how many of them had ever heard of, let alone seen, an archer before.

For some time I stood with my back to the field watching the children's eyes following the archers and it was the easiest thing imaginable to trace the path of each shot from the bow to the 'gold' and to know whether it had been a successful shot or not. Young heads swang in sympathy with each arrow; cheers did the rest.

The children were obviously delighted to see a lady in action and I doubt if Audrey Dunn has ever made so many young friends as quickly as she did last Sunday. . . but Roy Jenwick and Ron Dunn, her male colleagues, were not far behind in the affections of the youthful audience. . . particularly when they proved themselves very capable ballroom dancers.

A moral

The children, who by invitation formed the larger part of the crowd also enjoyed the thrill of the cyclists racing round the track. They found enjoyment too in the big hits of the Little Leaguers but seemed indifferent to the less spectacular parts of the game; they were of course most appreciative of the footballers, particularly with some famous players on view.

Strangely enough they seemed little interested in the hockey match and certainly, in spite of the appearance of some well-known athletes, they were little concerned with the track events. . . although obviously they found something amusing in the antics of the walkers.

Somewhere in all that there seemed to be a moral and I'm sure its significance was not lost on the organisers who have made it a major part of their policy to attract youngsters to the Festival and so indoctrinate them into the ways and attractions of big time sport.

The children clearly loved the unusual and the unexpected. . . they were quite unmoved by the orthodox. Many of them will want to come back next year to see the items that pleased them most; they will come hoping to see something new and equally engaging.

It was once said by some sage or other that "exaggeration is justified if it puts related points in a realistic perspective". . . and I think that is a first rate policy for the planners of the next festival. Woo the youngsters to the fold with the things they enjoy. . . and be assured they will soon want to wait and see the basic, yet very necessary, ingredients of a full scale sporting event.

The Hongkong Festival of Sport is already a success. . . it now remains only to convince a bigger and still more representative cross section of the community how successful it really is!

The Hongkong Football Association has done a masterly act in deciding to invite the famous Brazilian side, Madureira, to play three games here during April.

It is a bold challenge to the undercurrent of hostility which has been stirred by the adverse reaction to the distasteful affair of the Combined Chinese game against Young Boys of Berne. It is also a timely challenge for, with big plans on the committee table, it is imperative that the HKFA should know just where it stands in public confidence. This series may provide either a reassuring or a sobering answer.

The measures which the Association has taken to protect itself against misrepresentation by the Brazilians will meet with general approval but many folks are wondering just how it will protect itself against the current local circumstances which exist as a dismal legacy of the last game against overseas visitors.

By I. M. MacTAVISH

I have heard many suggestions of hidden selections. . . of making no definite nominations of players and team officials until just before the kick-off. . . of a mass selection for the series and a last-minute picking of the players who will appear in a particular match.

Unworkable

It is all very idealistic but frankly I think it is sadly unworkable. The fans would hardly accept a "blind-date" ticket at $10, and of course it is doubtful if the players would allow themselves to be party to such a situation.

There are many problems ahead and this series could be worth its cost in educational value alone. . . but, on the other hand, the Hongkong Football Association has a pretty vivid memory of the players who served it well in the last series and it could do worse than single them out for premier recognition on this occasion.

Football fans in every section of the community will watch developments with critical interest and they will let tear with a vengeance if they think they are in danger of being let down again. . . or they may simply register their protest in the very practical way of not buying tickets. Who could really blame them?

The special committee, which is investigating allegations made in the Chinese press about certain happenings connected with the third game of the recent series of soccer matches against the Young Boys of Berne, has now got underway with its work.

No doubt the members are willing to put a great deal of effort into the enquiry but anyone who listened to the recent public examination of involved players must have been left wondering if it was in fact the way to get about getting at the truth, whatever it may be.

The whole affair was amateurish in the extreme and while I have no idea what the members of the committee felt about the value of their evening's endeavours, there was no disguising the fact that the majority of the audience—at the very least—felt it was a sad waste of time.

Job for experts

There is no doubt that in this modern age of "recognition" . . . satiffy many folks fancy themselves as puerile Percy Masons but in a situation as serious, and possibly as far reaching, as the one which has developed here it would seem more expedient for the Hongkong Football Association to enlist the services of professional investigators. Few impartial observers give the present committee very much chance of success and they feel it might be better if more adequate steps were taken while the trail is still warm. . . if I may be permitted a phrase from popular detective fiction.

This is not a destructive criticism of the committee members who are doubtless working very hard within the limits imposed on any men asked to do in their spare time a task which would tax most the highly trained expert; it is a viewpoint based on personal observations and on the expressed opinions of people who want to see the investigation producing positive results whether these substantiate, or refute once and for all, the allegations which have been made.

The committee has a vital role to play in evaluating the overall situation but it should have the assistance of professional men trained in every aspect of investigation. Its future or its status would not be prejudiced in anyway by having the help of confidential reports based on expert probing.

PATTERSON THE BETTER BOXER

His superior skill and speed, KO punch and combination work will beat one-punch Johansson

In New York's Polo Grounds on the historic night of June 20 last, a jubilant, perky Floyd Patterson bent over the massive, inert frame of the ex-heavyweight champion of the world and shouted above the roar of the crowd: "You positively will get a third fight."

Ingenious Johansson, Sweden's horizontal Gothenburg Goliath, never heard him. Blood streamed from his mouth. His legs twitched convulsively. Eight minutes passed before he regained consciousness; half an hour before he could mumble his own name.

Therein lies the answer to the
No. 1 argument of Johans-son's supporters: that the Swede packs boxing's greatest weapon of destruction in the six-ounce glove of his right hand.

For all the ballyhoo about
"Ingo's blingo," that right-handed sledge-hammer is a powder-puff punch compared to Patterson's solid left-hook.

Complete knock-out

Look at the facts. With one left-hook to the jaw, Patterson floored a champion who had been knocked down only once before. With the second, he knocked out a man who had never before taken the count, or been defeated, in his entire professional career.

Such a complete, convincing knock-out was something that

Ingo's much-publicised blingo was quite unable to achieve in the first meeting with Patterson. Then it took the Swede seven knock-downs in the third round to finish the fight.

Yet this is the one blingo on which Johansson's foes of world champion glory and or fall. He has said as much himself: "Sure I've got a plan. I shall concentrate on remembering to keep Patterson away with my left and to make an opening for my right."

I readily agree that Ingo has a terrific weapon in his right fist. But he is a one-punch fighter. Apart from a credible 13-round points win over Britain's speedy Joe Erskine, three years ago, he has given scant evidence of outstanding all-round ring craft.

In winning the world title,
he did little more than manoeuvre until the opening came for his explosive right-hand punch. He did much the same in Stockholm before cracking home his right to Henry Cooper's jaw in the fifth.
Against the American Eddie Machon, his blingo finished the fight after about two minutes.

Superior skill

Johansson has proved that his legendary "sinking" can demolish the world champion.
But instead of gambling on a man with one great punch, I prefer to put my money on the two-fisted Patterson, a man with superior all-round skill and speed, a knock-out punch and fabulous combination work, and I contend a certain psychological advantage.

Some will argue that Patterson overcame the psychological disadvantage when he came back to regain the world title as no one had done before, and that Johansson can do the same. But remember that the big Swede was beaten much more convincingly, that he resisted so alarmingly on the cavans that doctors present suspected brain damage.

Johansson has since been given a clean bill of health, but the fear of permanent injury must remain beneath that tough exterior, especially for a wealthy, handsome

Hungry fighter

Sure, Mr Patterson has a pretty healthy bank balance for a former juvenile delinquent and problem child. But make no mistake—at heart, the Brooklyn boy is still a hungry fighter. He says: "I fight to see that my family and my mother will have a better living, that they will be able to enjoy some of the luxuries of life they would not otherwise have."

Johansson, one-time streetsweeper and son of a pavement-filter, has long since acquired the attributes that come with fame and fortune. He has learned to fly an aeroplane and do the cha-cha-cha, has hobnobbed with high society as a golfer, horseman, yachtsman, tennis player and skier, and has made his Hollywood debut.

He knows all about the good things in life and has had the brains to make a fortune without taking a single body blow—with his contracting business, interests in a fishing fleet, a garage and used-car firm, as well as by lending his handsome profile and rugged frame to drink-more-milk posters and sundry commercials. Last year he could afford to refuse to pose with a pile of salami for less than $5,000.

Among the greats

In contrast, 25-year-old Patterson, of a garbage collector, third of a family of nine boys and two girls, is dedicated to only one profession and depends on his fists to shape the future for his family and dependents. He is a humble, modest young man, leading a comparatively simple life.

Moreover, Patterson goes to Miami determined to settle a personal grudge—not with Johansson but with those critics who have persistently refused to recognise him as a really worthy world champion.

Before that defeat by Johnsson, Patterson had been beaten only once in 36 bouts—by Joey Maxim (on points) back in 1954. As an amateur, he was the outstanding performer as a middleweight at the 1952 Olympic Games in Helsinki.

Yet his ungenerous critics argue that he is a blown-up light-heavyweight who won the title against such trivia as wild

Says JOHN COTTRELL

Hurricane Jackson, professional novice Pete Rademacher, and schoolmaster Roy Harris from Cutt 'n' Shoot, Texas.

So much is true. Yet in terms of sheer boxing skill and artistry, I rate Patterson among the truly great champions of modern times.

With few fights against worthy opponents, he has sometimes become stale, but in his last fight he revealed more fire than ever before. The pecknaboo defence worked well; he launched vicious body attacks which forced the Swede to lower his guard; he scored superbly with his "whoosh-whoosh," as Johansson describes these swift combinations to body and head.

Efforts have even been made to detract from this performance by talk about Johansson being doped. But without support from the Swede we cannot give credence to this idea;
nor can the probe by Senator Eckes-Kavanaugh's committee into the gambling and racketeering side of boxing have been well timed to help Johansson in his training.

In Miami, this new, determined Patterson can give Johansson a dose of the same medicine. If he succeeds, he says: "There is a teeny-weeny chance that I might be called a good champion. Not a great one, or course, but a good one."

Then a long-awaited match with Sonny Liston would give Floyd Patterson the chance to prove his greatness once and for all.

Last Hexangular Rugby matches today

By "PROP"

The last two games of the Hex-angular Tournament will be played today.

Club have already made sure of the championship and Garrison are assured of the runner-up berth, but this should not detract from the standard of rugby to be seen at the Hongkong Football Club Stadium this afternoon.

Garrison will be attempting to reverse the early-season result when the Club beat them and set them back in their bid for the title, but Club are a difficult side to beat, and I cannot hold out much hope for the Garrison team unless the Club ease up as a reaction after winning the competition.

I take Club to win this game, especially after the improved form shown by their three-quarters in recent weeks.

Improved form

Brigade and RAF fought to a draw in their previous Hexan-gular encounter but I do not think that this will happen again. Brigade have shown much improved form over the past few weeks, and with more of their "star" players available they should be able to account for a much changed RAF side who have never quite settled down following the loss of Gee.
